372,000 Idle In Coal Fields; New Talks Set

Operators Accept Lewis' Invitation To Negotiations Here Wednesday

Pittsburgh, Feb. 13 (AP).—Striking soft coal miners scorned go-to-work demands of John L. Lewis and Uncle Sam today, but new peace talks were scheduled.

The "no contract, no work" walkout continued in full force with about 372,000 rebellious miners idle in nearly a score of States.

The Federal Government marked time with a wait-and-see attitude.

New layoffs were scheduled in the steel industry.

In West Virginia, an independent coal operator was roughed up by pickets when he tried to operate his mine. More than 1700 motorized pickets roamed highways in Pennsylvania.

Orders Telegraphed

Lewis telegraphed work orders to United Mine Workers district leaders after a Federal court directed the strike be ended and collective bargaining revived "in good faith."

The UMW president invited operators to start bargaining again Wednesday.

That invitation went unanswered for a while by the important Northern and Western operators, but the Southern Coal Producers Association agreed to meet with the union at 11 a. m. Wednesday.

Later, the Northern and Western operators told Lewis they would meet with him.

George H. Love, spokesman for the National Bituminous Coal Operators Negotiating Committee, sent the United Mine Workers chieftain this telegram:

"For the purpose of resolving present disputes and to adjust and settle all differences incident to the negotiations of a new national bituminous coal wage agreement we will meet with you at the Statler Hotel, Washington, D. C., at 11 o'clock a. m., Wednesday, February 15, 1950."

Some UMW district officials think a return-to-work movement might set in Tuesday.

They pointed out that many local

GOP Health Bill Hearing Is Demanded

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

Six "Young Turk" House Republicans yesterday challenged Administration "sincerity" on the health insurance issue in a statement demanding hearings on their own health bill.

In a letter to House Democratic Whip J. Percy Priest (D., Tenn.), chairman of a House Interstate Commerce subcommittee handling health measures, the six progressive-wing Republicans said they were testing the Administration's "good faith."

"Unless the Administration faces this issue now, it is obvious that it is being preserved for 1950 campaign purposes regardless of the medical needs of the country," the six sponsors of a substitute GOP health insurance bill wrote Priest.

The letter was signed by Representatives Christian A. Herter (Mass.), Jacob K. Javits (N. Y.), Clifford B. Case (N. J.), Richard

D. C. to Seek $23 Million Water Loan

Will Ask U. S. Help With Ten-Year Expansion Program

Legislation authorizing the District to borrow $23 million from the Government over the next 10 years to expand water facilities has been prepared and will be sent to the Bureau of the Budget for clearance in the next few days.

This was announced by District Engineer Commissioner Gordon R. Young yesterday after release of transcripts of District budget hearings before a House Appropriations subcommittee last month.

Facts of Loan Confirmed

The record of the proceedings confirmed reports that the District is seeking a Government loan to help finance a $47 million 10-year expansion program. The District would match the loan. Repayment, without interest, would start in 10 years from anticipated surpluses in the District water fund, Young informed the committee.

There is plenty of water in the Potomac River, the committee was told by E. A. Schmitt, head engineer of the Washington Aqueduct. The problem is to get it out of the river, process it and carry it to the increasing number of consumers.

Capacity Figures

Schmitt gave the committee these figures: the "dependable" capacity of the conduits carrying water from the dam at Great Falls to Dalecarlia Reservoir is 214 million gallons a day. The rated capacity of the city's filter plants is 185 million gallons a day. But the average daily consumption for six days last July was 232 million gallons; one day it reached 241 million.

Schmitt and Young told the committee plans call for building another dam nearly two miles upstream from Chain Bridge from which an auxiliary supply of water could be pumped to reservoirs. This will necessitate a corresponding increase in reservoirs, filtration plants, pumping stations and conduits, the committee was told.

Fleet Bars Sub Threat, Admiral Says

Soviet Has Third Of 270 Craft in Far East Waters, Sherman Declares

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

Russia has nearly one-third of its 270 submarines in Far East waters, but America's Pacific fleet is adequate to cope with them, Admiral Forrest P. Sherman said yesterday.

The Chief of Naval Operations and the other members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff "reported" on their recent trip to the Western Pacific at a press conference yesterday.

They told of "horrible" housing conditions in the area, declared the combat efficiency of military forces there to be "very, very good" and disclosed some concrete steps taken to eliminate duplication.

But the real story of their findings — how to keep communism from flowing over all of Asia — was reported only to President Truman and Defense Secretary Louis Johnson under a "top secret" classification.

Secret Report Made

Gen. Omar N. Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs, was asked if they had determined whether communism could be stopped at China's borders with American military aid. He declared this was primarily a State Department decision, but then added that the chiefs have commented on the matter in a secret report.

Sherman told reporters that the USSR has between one-quarter and one-third of its undersea fleet based in the maritime provinces of Siberia and at Dairen. This has been the situation for several years, he said, and the Navy understands there has been no change recently.

The total Russian sub fleet—principal element of the Red Navy—numbers some 270 boats "not counting midgets," Sherman declared. The force includes both modern snorkel craft and older types, and "ocean-going" as well as coastal vessels, he said.

Some cruisers, destroyers, destroyer escorts and smaller ships also form part of the USSR Far Eastern fleet, Sherman said. The rest of the Russian navy is divided between the Black Sea, Baltic Sea and Arctic Ocean, he added.

Situation 'Clarified'

The admiral also disclosed that the Joint Chiefs of Staff had "reaffirmed and clarified" the command situation in western Pacific waters to assure that there will be no divided command in event of war.

In peacetime, he said, Gen. Douglas MacArthur, Far East commander, will have operational control over Navy vessels only while in Japanese waters. In case of war, he added, MacArthur will have such control over them anywhere in the Western Pacific.

Spokesmen later elaborated on

House Quintet Plans Boycott To Speed FEPC

Home-Rule Measure Also Affected by Step To Foil Reporting Out

By Thomas Winship
Post Reporter

Five House District Committee members plan to boycott today's 10:30 a. m. full committee meeting in a deliberate move to speed action on the blocked District home rule and the national FEPC bills, it was learned last night.

On the local issue, the quintet—all strong home-rule supporters—look upon their stay-away plan as retaliation against the Southern Democratic-Republican committee coalition which last July shelved the Senate-passed suffrage measure.

Nationally, the group wants to prevent the District Committee from reporting out any minor local bills which could delay floor action on the controversial FEPC measure on Wednesday's call-of-the-committees day.

After the District Committee, the House Labor and Education Committee is next in line to be recognized, at which time Chairman John Lesinski (D., Mich.) is expected to call up his fair employment practices bill. That measure is bottled up in the House Rules Committee.

Representative Walter K. Granger (D., Utah), spokesman for the five District Committee members, said they would conduct their "sitdown strike until the bill passes."

And the sitdown will continue, insofar as possible, he said, "until we get floor action on home rule."

Granger disclosed he checked

GI Training 'Abuses' Hit By President

Message Requests Revision; Mounting Costs Are Criticized By Budget Bureau

By Mary Spargo
Post Reporter

President Truman yesterday asked Congress for action to stop the "abuses" of the veterans trade and vocational school program leading to skyrocketing costs to the taxpayer.

The cost of the 1950 fiscal year, originally estimated at $1,993,000,000, already has had to be revised up to $2,754,000,000.

The Chief Executive's request for legislation to stop "the belated growth" of certain kinds of courses which waste money without helping the veteran was based on a report prepared by Veterans Administrator Carl R. Gray, jr., and Budget Director Frank Pace.

The President discussed his message with Democratic Congressional leaders at the regular Monday legislative conference.

Examples of Abuses

The Veterans Administration and the Budget Bureau cited specific examples of abuses of the program, many of them encouraged by the so-called schools.

Gray and Pace said they were "startled" to find that four years after demobilization, costs of the program were at an all-time high.

The Budget Bureau estimated that more than 900,000 GIs would be taking trade courses by 1951 and that the national budget for the next fiscal year would probably have to be increased unless the trend is checked.

The report cited the case of several schools whose advertisements stressed the subsistance and other financial benefits to the veteran rather than the usefulness of the course.

Switch From School to School

For example, one school ran this ad:

"Learn tailoring—special offer today, $100 suit free to veteran students."

The report also told of the veterans who switched from school to school merely to draw subsistence payments. One veteran studied tailoring five months, later entered a course in "day stage" theater), then took a beauty culture course, quit in three months and reentered it again and completed it.

When last heard from, this veteran had quit a welding school and wanted to enroll in a voice school.

Another veteran protested to the government and demanded changes in the law after he discovered he got two and a half-hours credit for copying 10 letters from a black board and sending them to Government officials and radio commentators.

Billion Believed Lost

Representative John Taber (R., N. Y.), ranking Republican on the House Appropriations Committee, said hearings indicated the whole program needed careful rechecking and expressed his belief that taxpayers were being fleeced of at least one billion dollars by improper schools.

Significantly, Gray said that the "startling" growth in what appear to be many fly-by-night trade courses had accompanied a sharp drop in veterans' enrollment in standard colleges.

Gray and Pace recommended:

370 Returned In 431 Cases Since April 1948, Maher Tells Crime Probers

By Edward F. Ryan
Post Reporter

Washington grand juries since April, 1948, have returned 370 gambling indictments out of 431 gambling cases presented to them.

These figures were presented yesterday by Daniel B. Maher, special assistant corporation counsel, to the House District Committee investigating Washington crime and law enforcement.

It was the first time the committee, in its public hearings, had turned to the gambling phases of Washington crime.

Of the cases presented to the regular grand juries, Maher's figures showed 59 were listed as "ignored" and eight others as pending.

Maher also presented a previously published set of statistics showing that for the nine months from July 1947 through March 1948 the grand jury "ignored" 68 out of the 121 cases presented to it.

Committee Counsel Hyman I. Fischbach, noting the contrast, called for an explanation. Maher listed as one development the convening of the special grand jury to investigate gambling, set up in May 1948 by District Attorney George Morris Fay.

Eight Others Pending

When Fischbach asked whether the convening of the special grand jury had an effect on the gambling cases presented to the regular grand juries, Maher told him "that would be an assumption."

Maher cited as another development behind the upturn in gambling indictments a conference Fay had with Lieut. Roy Blick, head of the Metropolitan Police vice squad, about April, 1948.

Maher said Blick complained of a lack of vigorous prosecution of the gambling laws at that time.

Lieutenant Blick, joining Maher at the committee witness table, said he complained to Fay's office about the number of cases being ignored by the grand jury.

Blick said he saw Fay and the complaint was "why don't you go after the big fellows?"

Blick said he told Fay "if we could cut the roots of the tree down, we'd get the big ones that way."

He meant, Blick explained, that since the majority of big gambling operators are outside the District and Washington police jurisdiction, by going after the small men in gambling the police could eliminate the big operators' activities.

Fischbach asked Blick whether

Grand Jury Report Cites Perils as Gaming Operators Flout Local Laws

By Benjamin Bradlee
Post Reporter

"Organized gambling exists in the District of Columbia to a degree that indicates complete disregard for law and, if left uncurbed, constitutes a serious threat to the safety and welfare of this community."

This is the unanimous opinion of the 23 members of the special grand jury, which probed Washington's gambling rackets for 18 months in 1948 and 1949.

The grand jurors found that "gambling statutes now in effect in the District have lost their efficacy," and urged four changes.

The long-awaited report, withheld for three months to avoid prejudicing trials of men indicted by the special gambling jury, was released yesterday in District Court.

"Large, Lucrative"

Washington's "large, lucrative, and well organized" gambling business threatened the community, the report said, for three reasons:

1. In one year, 65 million numbers slips were used in the metropolitan area alone, with bets of five cents to $15 on each slip. Bookmakers take in from two to three times the money bet at tracks, the report estimated.

2. "Professional gambling is a breeding ground for numerous other crimes, particularly crimes of violence growing out of efforts by professional gamblers to gain or retain control over gambling operations." (Since the report was written four members of the local gambling fraternity have been hijacked in unreported holdups involving thousands of dollars.).

3. "Professional gamblers drain large sums of money from this area and pay little or nothing in Federal and local taxes."

Criminal Records

4. "Many professional gamblers in this jurisdiction have criminal records indicative of a complete and incurable contempt for lawfully constituted authority. Their possession of large sums of money gives them the means whereby they constantly seek to carry on their illegal activities with a minimum of interference."

The grand jury report, released on the eve of a special crime conference called by the Attorney General, listed four deficiencies in present laws against professional gambling:

1. State lines afford gamblers too much protection.

2. Instantaneous transmission of

Tornado Kills Family of 8 In Tennessee

Wind and Flood Toll In 5 Southern States Reported as 46 Dead

Memphis, Tenn., Feb. 13 (U.P.).—A tornado wiped out a family of eight today at a village fatally named Hurricane Hill and brought to 46 the death toll from twisters and floods in a savage five-State onslaught.

Tornado-breeding winds still skipped over parts of Alabama and Mississippi. Suddenly released floodwaters drowned three persons in Arkansas and forced 3000 to flee their homes in Louisiana and Mississippi.

Tornadoes in two days took 8 lives in Texas, 26 in Louisiana and 9 in west Tennessee. Scores were injured, 148 of them in Louisiana. Property damage was inestimable.

State police, Red Cross officials, coroners and sheriffs in the area agreed on these figures after eliminating several found to be duplications.

House Carried 85 Yards

Nature struck her cruelest blow at Hurricane Hill, 60 miles northeast of Memphis. Hitting as they slept, the tornado killed Wilson Carroll, his wife and their six children. The family's puppy somehow survived unhurt.

The wind picked up their house and slammed it down in splinters 85 yards away.

"The broken bodies of the children were scattered over 60 yards," said William Klutts, one of the rescuers who groped for victims in the early morning blackness.

"The farmhouse smashed through a thicket, tearing a big path through the woods. Trees in its path were knocked down and the house came to rest on a levee around a pond.

"Steel bedsteads were twisted up in knots. Two children were found dead on their mattress."

Alice Wright also was killed at Hurricane Hill when the wind flattened her shack. Sixty-three years ago, a devastating hurricane swept up the Mississippi Valley and whipped the area, giving Hurricane Hill it name.

Lousiana State police reported the following casualties: nine dead and 35 injured in Bienville

Naples Workmen Vote to Unload U. S. Arms Cargo

Rome, Feb. 13 (NYHT)—Communists have failed in an effort to close all Italian ports to shipments of American arms in connection with the North Atlantic military alliance, leaders of Italy's new united anti-Communist labor movement announced today.

Dock workers of Naples by an overwhelming margin have turned down a proposal by Marino di Stefano, Communist leader of one of the main Italian unions of longshoremen, that they refuse to unload American weapons, the labor movement said in an official communique.

Dock workers unions in Genoa, Leghorn, and La Spezia so far have voted against discharging the shipments, but at least in the case of Leghorn there are doubts that the votes represented the majority, the anti-Communist labor leaders added.

Missing Youth In Alexandria Found by Police

Police picked up Roland Maxfield, jr., 13, at 10 o'clock last night after more than 100 searchers had tramped though damp underbrush near the boy's home looking for him.

Roland

He is the son of Staff Sergt. and Mrs. Roland Maxfield, sr., of 152 Maiden lane, in Alexandria's Cameron Valley section where Fort Belvoir personnel live.

Police said the boy apparently took his father's .22-caliber pistol with him to Douglas MacArthur School yesterday. When the boy returned home at noon for lunch, police said, his mother questioned him about the weapon and he bolted from the house.

A 15-acre wooded thicket behind the Maxfield home was combed by police, firemen and volunteers before police picked him up near Union Station in Alexandria.

Virginia Bill to Lift Rent Lids Bars Nearby Area Exceptions

By Richard Morris
Post Reporter

Richmond, Va., Feb. 13.—A Senate committee today reported favorably a bill to repeal rent controls in all of Virginia, rejecting a House amendment to exempt the area surrounding Washington.

State Senator Charles R. Fenwick of Arlington made a futile plea before the Senate General Laws Committee to accept an amendment that would retain rent controls in Arlington, Fairfax and Prince William Counties and the city of Alexandria.

The committee voted 10 to 1 to send the bill to the floor as introduced in the House of Delegates by John B. Boatwright of Buckingham, and without the amendment by delegate Frank P. Moncure of Stafford, to exempt the area near Washington.

Senator Fenwick said he will renew his fight to amend the bill when it gets to the Senate floor. Senator Andrew W. Clarke, of Alexandria, who said he is committed to the repeal of rent controls, did not testify before the General Laws Committee.

An effort to exclude other areas from State-wide repeal was made by Senators Raymond R. Guest, Front Royal, and Frank P. Burton, Danville. Their proposed amendments also were rejected by the committee.

Fenwick pointed out that governing bodies of cities and towns have the power to decontrol rents by resolution. Local rent control advisory boards in counties can recommend decontrol to Federal authorities, he added.

Prince Georges County Unit Opposes Sothoron's Measure

(Related Story on Page B-1)

The Prince Georges County Civic Federation will oppose the Sothoron bill, it was disclosed last night.

The measure has been described as a home-rule bill for Prince Georges County. It was sponsored by State Senator L. Harold Sothoron, Prince Georges Democrat and administration stalwart.

The federation board of directors has voted unanimously to fight the Sothoron bill, Walter F. Mulligan, president of the federation, said last night.

Mulligan said the federation represents approximately 60 organizations in the county.

The federation thus lined up with the League of Women Voters of Prince Georges County which last Saturday denounced the Sothoron bill.

Mulligan said the federation had named him as its representative at a public meeting scheduled Friday night at Annapolis with the county's legislative delegation.

He said he had been instructed to voice the federation's opposition to the Sothoron bill "until a proper survey has been made of the local government and recommendations made on necessary changes."

Mulligan also will represent the federation this morning at a meeting of the county commissioners at Upper Marlboro and will ask for a definite reply on the local government survey.

The Berwyn District Civic Association, of which Mulligan is a member, met last night and went on record as opposed to the Sothoron measure. The asociation named Mrs. Margaret Wolfe, its secretary, to represent it at the hearing at Annapolis Friday night.

Gambling Threat To D. C., Jury Finds racing information, without which professional gamblers cannot operate, still exists.

3. No statute permits the confiscation of motor vehicles used regularly in the collection and transmission of numbers bets.

4. Professional gamblers still operate behind fronts of supposedly legitimate businesses, most of which are licensed under various sections of the D. C. code. License applications and renewals should continue to get "close scurtiny", the report said.

Superintendent of Licenses C. T. Nottingham commented on the jury's proposal yesterday "Before we can revoke any licenses we have to have convictions. We'd look silly trying to revoke on rumors alone. Anything that can be done to get more convictions will help us control gambling."

Tax Evasion

The special grand jury report said that all evidence of income and failure to pay taxes by known professional gamblers was turned over to the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

Similarly, the report said, more than 100 communications, relating to professional gambling and received by the jury, were turned over to the Metropolitan Police Department.

The report was sealed on November 16, 1949, when the grand jury completed its 18-month investigation. Judge Alexander Holtzoff said yesterday he ordered the report sealed at that time "because it was felt publication might be prejudicial to the rights of the defendants in several cases" brought by the special grand jury.

"Ordinarily," the judge said yesterday, "the court will not accept any presentment. It is the sole function of a grand jury to indict or ignore.

"In the light of the extraordinary and unusual circumstances, however, under which the report was presented, the court feels that the report may have public usefulness and that an exception should be made."

Sworn in 1948

The special grand jury was sworn on May 18, 1948, at the request of United States Attorney George Morris Fay and with the approval of Attorney General Tom Clark and Chief Justice Bolitha J. Laws of District Court.

Jacob D. Halsted, 55-year-old stock broker, was named foreman of the jury, composed of 11 women and 12 men.

The jury met at least 75 times and heard testimony of approximately 200 witnesses.

Accomplishments of the jury are not limited to the five-page report released yesterday.

36 Indicted

Thirty-six men were indicted in April, 1949.

The Bureau of Internal Revenue has collected an estimated $100,000 from a list of known gamblers submitted by the jury. Of this sum, more than $50,000 was collected in July, 1948, from a Georgetown numbers czar.

At the request of revenue agents, he opened his safe deposit box in July, 1948. It contained 240 $1000 bills and one $10,000 bill. He had declared an income of approximately $20,000 in each of the six previous years. After the agents saw the cash he declared an income of $118,000 for 1948.

Slips Subpenaed

The long-distance toll slips of more than 150 known Washington gamblers were subpenaed by the grand jury. The persons called were identified with the help of law enforcement officials in Chicago, New York, Pittsburgh, Miami and other large cities.

In virtually every instance these persons turned out to be professional gamblers also. But this information has not been released, and the proceedings of the grand jury have been sealed permanently by Judge Holtzoff.

More than 200 telephones, which Fay said were being used to violate District gambling laws, have been removed. Removal was recommended by the grand jury, after the jurors made a thorough study of the communications network used by professional gamblers here.

The jury also made a thorough study of investigative bodies in various large cities. The jurors found that most cities have at least two investigating agencies with concurrent jurisdictions. In those that have special crime commissions, at least three agencies investigate crime and corruption. In Washington, only the Police Department has criminal investigators. The results of this study and recommendations for a system of checks and balances here were not made public.

Eight Raids at Once

Climax of the jury's investigation came on March 25, when eight raids were made simultaneously in Maryland and the District as a result of evidence presented before the jury.

Thirty-six men, arrested during the raids and immediately afterward, were indicted by the special gambling grand jury on April 8. The jurors met less than five times between April and November, when the grand jury was disbanded.

Of the 36 indicted gamblers, four have been convicted, one has been acquitted, two have died, cases against five have been dropped and 25 still face trial. One man was indiced three times and another twice.

Lewis and Billeci

William "Snags" Lewis, described by Fay as a "big shot gambler" and alleged head of a 14-million-dollar-a-year gambling syndicate, has been convicted of operating a numbers lottery. He got 10 to 30 months. So has Frank Billeci, former circulation man for the Washington Times-Herald. He got 8 to 27 months. So has Attilio Acalotti, the self-styled "Mayor of Thomas Circle." He got 8 to 24 months. All three have appealed.

Acalotti has also been convicted of threatening bodily harm to the most colorful and productive witness to testify before the special gambling jury, his former sweetheart, Bernice Franklin. He got 8 to 24 months on that rap, the jail sentences to be served concurrently.

Lewis and 13 other men were tried in November for conspiracy and operating a lottery, but the jury was hung, 10-2 for acquittal. They are scheduled for retrial February 27, but it is anticipated that they will be extradited to Prince Georges County, Maryland, where they have also been indicted.

Gambling Table

One man has been convicted of setting up a gambling table to bet on the horses. One man has been acquitted of a similar charge.

Two men died after they were indicted but before they were brought to trial.

The case against four of the indicted gamblers were dismissed at the Government's request for lack of evidence. The case against one man was dropped after he was convicted of a similar offense in a Virginia court.

Fay estimated yesterday that the total cost of the grand jury was approximately $25,000. Three former FBI agents, Downey Rice, Daniel L. O'Connor, and James Sharp, were retained as part-time $25-a-day special consultants to Fay to assist in the investigation.

Text of Grand Jury Report on Gaming

REPORT

WHEREAS, the members of the Additional Grand Jury of the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, were duly empaneled and sworn on May 17, 1948, for the purpose of inquiring into violations of the gambling laws of the District of Columbia and other crimes resulting therefrom; and

WHEREAS, evidence to this Additional Grand Jury has been of such a nature that it is deemed necessary and appropriate to bring to the attention of this Honorable Court its conclusions in connection therewith;

NOW, THEREFORE, this Additional Grand Jury respectfully presents to this Honorable Court the following:

The members of the Grand Jury are of the unanimous opinion that organized gambling exists in the District of Columbia to a degree that indicates complete disregard for law and if left uncurbed constitutes a serious threat to the safety and welfare of this community.

This threat exists by reason of the following facts:

A. Professional gambling in the District of Columbia is a large, lucrative and well organized business which in recent years has become interstate in nature and difficult to control. It is impossible to accurately estimate the volume of this business. However, it appears that in the metropolitan area of Washington, in one year, the numbers business used more than 65 million slips to record this type of bet. While nominal bets of 5 or 10 cents are accepted, many players daily bet from $1 to $15 on the numbers. Moreover, those in authority estimate that the amount wagered illegally with bookmakers is from two to three times the amount bet at the tracks.

B. Professional gambling is a breeding ground for numerous other crimes, particularly crimes of violence growing out of efforts by professional gamblers to gain or retain control over gambling operations in this community. It necessarily follows that the more profitable such gambling becomes, the greater will be the incitement to the criminal element to seek control by force and violence.

C. Professional gamblers drain large sums of money from this area and pay little or nothing in Federal and local taxes.

D. Many professional gamblers in this jurisdiction have criminal records indicative of a complete and incurable contempt for lawfully constituted authority. Their possession of large sums of money gives them the means whereby they constantly seek to carry on their illegal activities with a minimum of interference.

Accordingly, we have found:

1. Professional gambling in the District of Columbia is not local in character. Gambling headquarters are maintained in adjoining States and the business is actively stimulated by and conducted in alliance with large professional gambling syndicates operating on a Nation-wide scale throughout the United States. The safety afforded professional gamblers by State lines has made it impossible for local police authorities to effectively control their operations. This results from the fact that the gambling statutes now in effect in the District of Columbia have lost their efficacy due to changed conditions. The statutes were written to meet a purely local problem which at that time had not reached its present financial and geographical proportions. As a result there is not, at the present, sufficient legislation to adequately deal with the interstate problems of local professional gambling.

2. It is impossible for the professional gamblers to conduct large scale operations without utilizing telephone facilities for the solicitation of bets and for making lay-off bets. Organized gambling likewise cannot exist without the aid of telephone, telegraphic, radio or television facilities for rapid receipt of racing results. We believe that enforcement of local gambling laws will be extremely difficult as long as racing information can be instantaneously transmitted to bookmaking establishments. A forward step has been taken by the Federal Communications Commission's requirement for the filing of telephone and telegraph tariff regulations which forbid the use of these instrumentalities for illegal purposes.

3. The numbers business in the District of Columbia requires the regular use of automobiles and other motor conveyances not only for the collection of numbers slips and bets, but for the transmission of such slips and bets for recording and checking at central points here and in adjoining States. There is at present no statutory provision for the confiscation of such vehicles by the court. We do not believe that a motor vehicle should be confiscated because of an isolated or technical violation of the gaming laws. We do believe, however, that where the evidence clearly discloses that motor vehicles are used regularly in carrying on the business of local professional gamblers in the District of Columbia and in neighboring States, there should be some provision of law permitting the court to confiscate these vehicles.

4. Professional gambling operations in the District of Columbia are conducted to a large extent behind fronts of supposedly legitimate businesses. These include certain restaurants, liquor stores, poolrooms, newstands, taxicabs and other businesses which are licensed under various provisions of the District of Columbia code. The continued close scrutiny of the applications for these licenses and renewals thereof can be an effective check against their illegal use.

5. The work assigned to this grand jury was from its very nature investigative. It endeavored to ascertain the pertinent facts relating to the operations of professional gambling in the District of Columbia and was able to concentrate on this inquiry as the regularly empaneled grand juries heard those gambling cases brought in by law enforcement agencies which warranted presentation to a grand jury.

During the investigation the United States Attorney's office received and turned over to the Grand Jury more than 100 communications relating to professional gambling in the District of Columbia. These communications were studied by us and the information therein pertinent to local aspects of gambling were transmitted to the Metropolitan Police Department.

Very early in the investigation we ascertained that the most important phase of local professional gambling, and the most difficult to deal with, was the interstate nature of its operation. Throughout the investigation therefore, we gave special emphasis to that problem.

We found that the men behind organized gambling rings operating in the District of Columbia protected themselves by maintaining their headquarters in adjoining States. These men were careful to insulate themselves from actual betting transactions, leaving such matters to lieutenants or front men, who likewise made constant use of the protections afforded by State lines.

The staff employed to assist us in our inquiries consisted of three trained men who were retained on a part-time basis. It was therefore only possible to have a complete investigation in a few major cases having interstate phases. This Grand Jury returned indictments in the few major cases presented to it. The pattern of operations in these cases was similar and illustrative of the methods used by professional gamblers in this area.

It appears that shortly after this Grand Jury was convened, many well known gamblers left the metropolitan area and later returned to their headquarters and hideouts in adjoining States.

Numerous other witnesses appeared before us and gave testimony, some appearing voluntarily and others in response to subpoena. Many of those who testified stated that they did so only in light of the secret nature of Grand Jury proceedings and the protection afforded thereby.

A complete and detailed report of this Grand Jury which has functioned during a period of 18 months would of necessity be lengthy and involved. We have accordingly set forth in this report only the basic facts ascertained from our investigation.

New Northeast Optimist Club Elects Officers

Officers were selected as follows: Arthur K. Jacobs, president; Arthur Hartung, Milton Kronheim, sr., and George Unsinn, vice presidents; Bernard Dodder, secretary; William B. Mehler, treasurer.

With a charter membership of more than 70,, the group will meet every Thursday at the Congressional oHtel. Membership will not be restricted to any section.

Indictments Rise Sharply

the big gambling operators, from time to time, do not come into the District.

Blick agreed they did, and that the police could follow them into surrounding areas in "fresh pursuit" but the problem was one of getting evidence.

Blick said that at Fay's suggestion he went before the grand jury and showed a quantity of numbers slips and other paraphernalia used in gambling, and "explained the handicaps we were working under."

Fay was the first witness in the hearing yesterday, but he left before Blick and Maher testified. Fay's chief assistant, John W. Fihelly heard them, but would not comment.

Maher, under questioning by Fischbach, said that although he served as an assistant district attorney from 1942 to 1947 he had no personal knowledge of the statistics on gambling indictments before July, 1947. He said he believed the figures for the nine-month period strating in July, 1947—with grand juries ignoring 56 percent of the gambling cases—probably reflected the conditions before that time.

To a question by Fischbach, Blick said he had been waiting 14 months for advice from Fay's office on what to do about after-hours clubs. Legislation for licensing such clubs has been under study by the Corporation Counsel's office for some time.

Grand Juries Overworked

Fay told the committee his office is undermanned, that grand juries are overworked, and that security conditions at the courts are "deplorable." He said he now has 33 assistants to serve courts with a total of 41 judges. He has asked at least 12 more.

He said he has been urging there be two regular grand juries instead of the present one in continuous session. Security, he said, won't be touched until the new Federals Courts Building is in use.

In questioning both Fay and Maher, Fischbach showed special concern about the large number of gambling cases ignored by the grand jury before March, 1948, and taken from there to Police Court.

Fay said there was inherent authority in the District legal system for taking cases ignored by the grand jury into Police Court to seek conviction on lesser charges.

Fischbach asked if the attention of the court that convened the grand juries had been called to the large number of cases ignored. Fay said the court had been told. Fischbach asked if the grand juries had been called out and reinstructed. Fay said he recalled no such incident.

One Straight Sentence

From Maher's figures, Fischbach brought out that from July, 1947, through March 1948, out of the 68 cases ignored by the grand jury, 53 were referred to Police Court. Of these, only one got a straight jail sentence, Maher said, while all other sentences were a choice of doing time or paying a fine. The fines varied from $50 to $300.

Fischbach asked Maj. Robert J. Barrett, superintendent of police, whether he felt such fines would discourage gambling.

"No, sir," said Barrett.

"Or would they inspire gambling," continued Fischbach.

"Yes," said Barrett.

The committee also heard Lieut. Clyde O. Rouse, who retired a year ago, testify there had been no prosecution of a woman who tried to fight him off a speeding car whose crash killed a police buddy and severely injured Rouse.

The event occurred November 1, 1946. Killed was Detective Harry E. Hamilton. Rouse suffered a fractured leg and other injuries. The driver of the car, Charles W. Scott, 24, Negro, with a long police record, died at the District jail infirmary 34 hours after the crash of the car he had stolen. His death led to one of the longest Washington inquests on record, and to a coroner's jury's finding that he died of natural causes.

Rouse said that throughout the wild ride—with Hamiltpn on the driver's side, and Rouse on the other—Scott's woman companion "clawed and kicked and scratched me and tried to push me back out." He said the woman prevented him from reaching the ignition key.

"Was that little lady ever prosecuted?" asked Fischbach.

"No, sir," said Rouse.

He said an assistant District attorney refused to issue papers.

The hearing was recessed through today and tomorrow morning, and may resume Wednesday afternoon, but the time is to be decided by Chairman Davis.

Tygoon Phone Ban Sought

local officials called to Washington by Attorney General J. Howard McGrath to plan ways and means of smashing the big syndicates. The one-day conference will be addressed Wednesday morning by President Truman, McGrath and leaders of each group.

The mayors and their law officers, it was indicated yesterday, will emphasize the use of telephones in transmitting horse racing results to off-track bookmakers. The groups are not expected to neglect the slot machine rackets, however.

A bill now before the House to ban interstate shipment of the one armed bandits is expected to win approval of the two groups as well as of the American Municipal Association and the National Association of Attorneys General, the other organizations sending delegates.

Alan H. Bible, Attorney General of Nevada (where gambling is legal) and president of the Association of Attorneys General, arrived yesterday. He told The Washington Post he is "delighted the Attorney General has called this conference."

Bible pointed out that at his group's last national convention a resolution was passed calling for greater cooperation by the Federal Government in helping to stamp out gambling law violations. The resolution said both the States and the Federal Government should be concerned by organized gambling on an interstate basis which makes use of wire and telephone systems to furnish "direct racing information for illegal bookmaking establishments . . ."

To Prepare Statement

The young attorney general, a Georgetown law graduate of 1934, said his group's executive committee will meet today to draw up the statement he will present Wednesday. Bible said he brought a rough draft along with him but the committee has the last word and he will be guided by the convention resolution.

Biggest guns in the drive at the crime conference for new Federal legislation to hamper the tygoons probably will be the delegates of the American Municipal Association. They include Mayors Quigg Newton of Denver, deLesseps Morrison of New Orleans, Fletcher Bowron of Los Angeles, A. E. Cobo of Detroit and Joseph Darst of St. Louis. They held an executive committee meeting in Chicago yesterday and were to arrive here this morning.

The one-day crime conference is being held at the time the United States Attorneys from all over the Nation are holding their annual Washington conference with McGrath and other Justice Department officials. A dozen of the attorneys, including Washington's George Morris Fay, will be delegates at the crime meeting.

U. S. Delay Seen

Recognition Of Peiping Not in Sight

By Christopher Rand

Bangkok, Thailand, Feb. 13 (NYHT).—Here at Bangkok, where high American diplomats in the Far East are holding one of their periodic conferences, one gets the impression that American recognition of the Chinese Communist government is still far away.

What seems to be in prospect for a long period is continuance of the present situation, without any particular American hostility toward the Peiping regime. It seems to be now a settled American policy not to engage in economic warfare against that regime or in other actions advocated by a section of American opinion.

It must be pointed out that the current conference shows no signs of being the decisive event for American policy toward Asia which some had expected. It appears to be merely a gathering for consultation and review of the situation. No new policy is expected to be laid down here. Probably there will be, at the most, recommendations for consideration later by Washington.

There are various reasons why American recognition of the Peiping regime may be delayed. One is the actions of that government itself. The detention and subsequent deportation of American Consul General Angus Ward and the staff he had at Mukden, Manchuria, made recognition difficult while they were in progress. Next the Peiping authorities raised a further obstacle by seizing the old Marine barracks at Peiping, which had recently become part of the American consular property there. When Washington then decided to withdraw from Communist-dominated China all American consular personnel, this moved the likelihood of recognition still further into the distance.

The difficulties encountered by foreign business in China during the last few months are believed to have lessened American businessmen's enthusiasm about the future importance of China trade.

Chinese Red Denies Talks Have Hit Snag

Hongkong, Feb. 13 (U.P.).—Tan Akh-kee, a top-ranking member of the Peiping government, said today that Communist Leader Mao Tze-tung was prolonging his stay in Moscow to absorb more Kremlin "know-how."

The aged Tan, amember of the 55-man government council of the Communist regime, is referred to as a "democratic personage" because he has not been a member of the party.

He said Mao had never been abroad before and for him to direct the reconstruction of China correctly he must go abroad and see how things are done in Russia.

He said Mao's personal observations, especially of Soviet industrial development, were essential to the building up of China. He said Foreign Minister Chou-en-lai was prolonging his Moscow stay to help Mao study Soviet progress.

Tan said they had cabled Peiping they would return next month.

Tan, en route from Peiping to Singapore, said in an interview that all press speculation on Soviet demands on Mao was "pure nonsense."

He also referred to rumors of a split in the Chinese Communist high command as "pure nonsense" and said Titoism is an "impossibility" in Communist China.

He denied that Russia "dominated" Communist China and said China would be permanently bound to the Soviet by "mutual friendship and alliance."

Yugoslavs Sentence 15 Of 'Anti-State' Group

Belgrade, Yugoslavia, Feb. 13 (U.P.).—The Belgrade District Court tonight sentenced 13 members of a "terrorist antistate" organization to hard labor prison terms of from 5 to 20 years.

Two other defendants got off with two years of "corrective labor" because of their youth. Under a corrective labor sentence, the prisoner stays at home, works at least eight hours a day, but gets no pay.

All 15 defendants were members of the "Union of Yugoslav Nations" described as a secret and terrorist organization," headed by Ivan Bunjvic, who was sentenced to 20 years at hard labor.

Canada Knows Spies Are Plotting There

Ottawa, Feb. 13 (U.P.).—Justice Minister Stuart Garson said today he knows foreign espionage and sabotage agents are working in Canada in a plot against the nation's security.

Government officials, he said, "have already taken measures to guard against them." He did not elaborate on these protective measures.

Aquitania Is Sold To Scrap Company

Liverpool, Eng., Feb. 13 (AP).—The Cunard 44,000-ton liner Aquitania, built in 1913, has been sold to the British Iron and Steel Corp., Ltd., for demolition.

The Aquitania has made 442 Atlantic crossings, having steamed more than three million miles and carried nearly 1,200,000 passengers.

Saigon, Feb. 13 (AP).—Warfare in Indo-China increased its tempo today.

French sources said the French army had launched a large-scale military operation about 60 miles southeast of Hanoi in the northern state of Annam with the object of clearing the area of Moscow-supported No Chi-minh's forces. No details were given but the offensive was said to be going well.

About 100 of Ho's guerillas, armed with grenades and machine-guns, ambushed a French convoy of 50 trucks and cars 24 miles northeast of Saigon. Six persons were killed, 10 wounded, and a man, his wife, and child taken as hostages. About seven vehicles were burned.

This was only one of a series of hit-and-run attacks recently. Saturday night anti-French terrorists exploded three grenades in front of Saigon's largest theater, injuring three persons. A large number of guerillas made a surprise attack on the French military post of Pholou in northwestern Tonkin the day before.

Ho, whose Vietnam republic was recognized recently by Russia and Communist China, appears to have increased his activities since Chinese Communist troops arrived on the northern frontier.

French sources, who are backing the United States—recognized Bao Dai regime of Vietnam, predicted that Ho soon will visit Moscow. He is believed now to be in China. His government, secreted some place in the jungle for the past three years, is believed to have plenty of military manpower but lacking in arms and supplies.

Quirino Says He May Call Anti-Red Talks

Manila, Feb. 13 (U.P.).—President Elpidio Quirino said today he may call an organizing meeting "in a month or so" of Far East nations interested in forming an anti-Communist pact.

The group would be called a "Union of New Democracies in the Western Pacific and Southeast Asia," and would be expected to organize at the mountain resort of Baguio.

Quirino declined to name all countries which will be invited but authorized speculation on Thailand, Indonesia, Ceylon, Pakistan and Burma and perhaps New Zealand and Australia.

He said it would not be prudent to mention officially the names of countries which expressed readiness to meet when approached by Gen. Carlos P. Romulo, president of the recent United Nations General Assembly meeting. Romulo is expected to return to Manila early in March, at which time more definite plans would be made.

Quirino said he still was considering whether to invite the Chinese Nationalists. He refused to say whether India was interested.

Quirino told a press conference "America is living up to her commitments" on military assistance and Philippine bases.

Tragedy Overtakes Double for Hitler

Giessen, Germany, Feb. 13 (U.P.).—Heinrich Noll's dream of cashing in on his likeness to Adolph Hitler by starring in a movie film vanished today.

Waking after a night of drinking with an unidentified American and several Germans, Noll found his long-nurtured Hitler mustache and Fuehrer-like hair had been shaved off.

He said he would sue.

Trieste Unions Begin 2-Day General Strike

Trieste, Free Territory (Tuesday), Feb. 14 (AP).—A two-day general strike began in this former Italian city early today.

It was called by both non-Communist and pro-Communist trade union leaders to back up demands by industrial workers for a 60-lire (10 cents) a day cost of living bonus. The industrial workers have been on strike since February 1.

The new walkout affects 35,000 workers, it is estimated. Nearly all shops will be closed. Railway workers will strike for two hours.

Argentina Ends Guard On 2 News Agencies

Buenos Aires, Feb. 13 (AP).—A congressional committee today ordered removal of the police guard it had placed in the offices of the Associated Press and United Press nearly three months ago.

Dresden Raid Anniversary Used by Reds

Berlin, Feb. 13 (AP).—The Allied bombing of Dresden five years ago was piped up by Communist leaders today to arouse hatred among east Germans against the United States and Britain.

Dresden's mayor, Walter Weidauer, wrote in the chief Communist Party organ, Neues Deutschland, that the raids on the Soviet zone city killed 35,000 civilians but had "not been a military necessity."

The British Foreign Office said in London the planes had bombed Dresden to support advancing Russian troops.

"At the Yalta Conference, it was decided that the Western Allies would give all possible tactical support to the advancing Russian forces," a Foreign Office spokesman said. "Dresden was the main communications center for the defending German armies.

"When speaking of bombing, the German people should remember the German bombing of Warsaw on September 1, 1939, which started the whole chain of events."

Communist organizations in the Russian zone marked the fifth anniversary of the bombing of the old Saxon capital by sponsoring "Remember Dresden" observances.

All street traffic in Dresden was ordered to stop for one minute of silence at noon.

Recalling the Dresden bombing, Mayor Weidauer wrote:

"For this dreadful deed, we shall remember the American and English warmongers again and again. We wish tirelessly to recall this horrible destructive work to all Germans who have been bought by Wall Street and have become traitors to our German fatherland."

East Germany's Communist president, Wilhelm Pieck, officially described today as the "fifth anniversary of the senseless destruction of one of the most beautiful cities of Germany by American bombers."

Fiat Automobile Plant Planned in Australia

Melbourne, Feb. 13 (AP).—The Fiat Company of Italy has offered to build a five million pound plant in Australia for making light cars, tractors and heavy commercial vehicles.

The venture, it was reported, will be jointly financed by the Fiat group and British investors. (A government spokesman said the plant probably would be located in Queensland.)

David M. Kee New Envoy To Burma

President Truman yesterday chose David McK. Key as Ambassador to Burma.

The White House announced that the nomination will be sent to the Senate today.

Key is a career officer in the State Department with 25 years' experience. He is 50 years old. He has served in Belgium, Germany, Britain, Canada, Italy, Spain, and Brazil.

A graduate of Harvard University in 1922, Key attended the Georgetown University School of Foreign Service before he joined the department March 20, 1925.

Key at present is in Bangkok, Siam, attending a meeting of American Far Eastern diplomats. He lives in Essex, Conn., but was born in Tokyo, of American parents.

His last assignment overseas was as counselor of the American Embassy at Rio de Janeiro.

Laws of Hungary Bar American as Vogeler Attorney

Budapest, Hungary, Feb. 13 (U.P.).—American Businessman Robert E. Vogeler cannot, under Hungarian law, have an American defense attorney when he goes on trial February 17 on charges of espionage and sabotage, a legal authority said today.

Voice of America and BBC broadcasts said Vogeler's relatives and the International Telephone & Telegraph Co., of which he is an official, had commissioned New York Attorney Morris Ernst to defend him.

But the legal source pointed out that under the law here, only Hungarian subjects can practice as lawyers. Thus, he said, no foreign lawyer could defend Vogeler.

Vogeler, East European manager for I. T. & A., and his British associate were arrested November 18. They will stand trial with five alleged Hungarian accomplices.

Parish; 8 dead and 16 injured at Slack Air Force base near Shreveport and vicinity; 6 dead and 45 injured in Desota Parish; 3 dead and 14 injured in Bossier Parish.

The Air Force said the damage at the Slack base would run to $250,000.

Meanwhile big and little rivers jumped their banks anew in flood-weary Arkansas, where 20,000 have been homeless for two weeks. Mrs. Mattie Irene Dildine, 43, and her son, Jummy, 7, perished in Caney Creek in Lawrence County when the flood swept over their wagon. Another son escaped. Roady Novella Lowe, 30, of Barker, was drowned when her car plunged into the flood of little Washington Creek.

Torrential rains accompanied the tornadic conditions over a large part of the middle Mississippi Valley. The United States Engineers here said there is a "distinct possibility" the Birds Point-New Madrid, Mo., floodway may have to be opened. The floodway is situated between Memphis and the Mississippi's junction with the Ohio at Cairo, Ill.

Along the Louisiana-Mississippi border the rising backwaters of the Black and Tensas Rivers flooded out 3000 residents and more were leaving home.

Police Answer Prowler Call, Get the Bird

Eighth Precinct police got the bird yesterday, literally and not the Brooklyn kind.

Answering a prowler call at the home of Mrs. Lillie J. Sterling and her daughter, Mrs. Virginia Wooley, 4312 Albermarle st. nw., the police heard the same noise in the basement that the two women had heard. It sounded like a man ransacking the place.

Going downstairs with guns drawn, they found the noisemaker was a bird—either a starling or blackbird. The guns were holstered. The policemen caught the bird and released it outside.

11 Scientists Rescued From Antarctic Isle

London, Feb. 13 (AP).—Eleven scientists have been rescued from their two-year isolation in the Antarctic by ski plane and boat, and their base abandoned, the Colonial Office announced today.

The rescue was effected by the 1200-ton supply ship John Biscoe which twice failed on a similar mission last year.

The scientists were sent to ice-locked Stonington Island in 1948 for a one-year weather and geological survey. They lived in specially constructed huts and kept in touch with the world by radio. They had enough food and supplies for several months yet but had suffered from boredom. The expedition was headed by Dr. V. E. Fuchs of Cambridge.

When the rescue expedition failed last year because the John Biscoe was unable to cut through the ice, the wooden ship returned to England and was fitted with a new steel prow. She also carried two ski planes on this latest trip to the Antarctic.

Five of the scientists were removed by ski plane earlier. A message to the Colonial Office said the last six were removed yesterday by ski plane and boat and were being taken to the Argentine Islands, 250 miles to the north.

Pike Will Head AEC On Temporary Basis

By Alfred Friendly
Post Reporter

With the resignation Wednesday of David E. Lilienthal, Commission Sumner T. Pike is expected to assume the acting chairmanship of the Atomic Energy Commission.

Pike, it was understood yesterday, may fill the job on a temporary basis for several weeks or months. President Truman indicated last week he has no one in mind at present as a permanent replacement for the AEC top post.

Early in 1947, Pike was formally designated to serve as acting chairman whenever Lilienthal was not present. From point of service, he is the senior member of the AEC. When Lilienthal leaves, he will be the only original member still in office.

Pike, a Republican from Maine, had intended to leave the AEC this spring. He has reportedly reconsidered his decision at Lilienthla's request, and was Lilienthal's nominee to Mr. Truman as temporary acting chairman.

He formerly was a public utility and busines executive, and subsequently was a member of the Temporary National Economic Committee and the Securities and Exchange Commission.

In other atomic developments yesterday, the State Department invited Russia to resume talks on international atomic control. It promised a "sympathetic" hearing in the United Nations if the Soviets have any new proposal to offer.

John D. Hickerson, assistant secretary, gave this mollifying response to a charge by Russia's Jacob A. Malik that the western powers were to blame for the action of Soviet delegates in quitting U. N. atomic discussions last month.

Reaffirming American support for the U. N. General Assembly plan for rigid international inspection and control of all atomic development, Hickerson told newsmen nevertheless that "we don't think for one moment all human ingenuity was necessarily exhausted in that plan." He added:

"If there are other proposals we are prepared to examine them sympathetically in an earnest and sincere effort to reach an effective agreement to control atomic energy and to eliminate atomic weapons."

This was a general restatement of the American official position, but the timing and emphasis suggested a cautious new approach to the long atomic deadlock. A weekend Moscow dispatch—passed by the Soviet censor—reported that talk of the possibilities of achieving world-wide atomic control has been revived by diplomatic circles in the Soviet capital.

Hickerson's comments appeared to some observers as counter-action to what looked like a propaganda move by the Russians. Malik's charge sought to blame the Western nations with the breakdown in U. N. atomic talks. Hickerson's remarks yesterday sought to show that the onus lay, instead, with the Kremlin.

4th Officer Of Big Mo Is Defendant

BEVEN TRAVIS
. . . Helmsman on the Mo

Norfolk, Va., Feb. 13 (AP).—The combat operations officer of the battleship Missouri was named a defendant today by the naval court of inquiry probing the vessel's grounding.

The court advised Lieut. John E. Carr of Norfolk it designated him a defendant because his testimony showed that he:

1. Failed to report to the big Mo's bridge that he was doubtful of her position when she appeared to be standing into shoal water.

2. Failed to keep the bridge informed of what was going on in the ship's combat operations center.

There are now four defendants and one "interested party" before the court. Defendants, besides Carr, are the Missouri's commanding officer, operations officer and navigator. They are Capt. William D. Brown, Comdr. John R. Millett and Lieut. Comdr. Frank G. Morris. The interested party, whose status the court can change to defendant, is Ensign E. R. Harris, assistant navigator.

As combat operations officer, Carr was in charge of the Missouri's combat operations center, where navigation can be done by means of radar.

The Missouri's steersman said today he "knew she was going aground" but did not tell the skipper "because it is not my place to give the captain orders."

"It is my place to take orders," and besides, "the captain was quite busy at the time," quartermaster second class Beven E. Travis added.

The witness said he knew the ship would ground unless she were turned to the right. Asked by the judge advocate how he knew this, he replied that:

1. The ship was "sluggish in answering the helm;

2. She seemed to be slowing down, and

3. It was evident she was too far to the left—(north)— as Thimble Shoal light was on the port —(left)—bow when it should have been "well on the starboard bow."

Travis has been assigned as helmsman on the Missouri since 1946, he testified, and he has been at the wheel "many times" when she entered and departed Hampton Roads.

He said he did not know the ship was to run a secret electronic range just outside the main ship channel. The Missouri grounded while attempting to run this range.

Senator Assails U. S. Missiles Program 'Lag'

By The Associated Press

Senator Lyndon B. Johnson (D., Tex.) yesterday demanded an immediate review of the Nation's guided-missiles program because, he said, Russia is far ahead in developing these weapons for push-button warfare.

Declaring that the United States is lagging at least two years behind the Soviets, Johnson told a news conference:

"If guided missile warfare should begin within the next two or three years, we—at our present rate—would be very feeble participants.

"For a push-button war, we have neither the push nor the button."

The Texas Senator, a member of the Senate Armed Services Committee, said the United States may be ahead in developing A-bombs and projected new hydrogen bomb, but he commented:

"I'm afraid we are behind Russia in the ability to deliver our explosives in battle.

"Publicity about some of our rocket research has created a largely false impression that we have weapons which would be used in defense of this country. As of now, we have none.

"Our missile program is a minor, almost obscure item in the defense budget. Each of the three (armed) services has a missile program of its own—but as yet no really worthwhile guided missile."

The Senator said the whole program of rocket research should be reviewed at once either by the Secretary of Defense "or if necessary by Congress."

this. By "Japanese waters" is meant the waters "contiguous to occupied Japanese territory"—that is, Japan proper, Iwo Jima and the Ryukyus. The ships of Vice Adm. R. S. Berkey's Seventh Task Fleet, thus will be under MacArthur only when in Tokyo Bay or Japanese coastal waters, though they would pass to his control in an emergency wherever operating in the Far East.

A reporter asked Bradley if their talks with MacArthur had given them the impression that he was dissatisfield with some of their decisions dealing with the Far East. Bradley said they had got no such impression, and added that MacArthur realized that all forces had to be reduced under the economy program.

The Joint Chiefs' chairman said there had been "very limited discussion" about military aid for Formoso, "as we already knew his views." MacArthur is said to favor positive action to keep the island refuge of the Chinese Nationalist government from falling into Communist hands.

Bradley would not discuss the top-secret report given to the President Saturday. However, informed sources said yesterday that it did not go into the possibility of American military aid to Chinese forces on Formosa, or specific military aid to Indo-China or Indonesia.

Discussing elimination of duplication in the western Pacific, the Joint Chiefs said they had ordered the Military Air Transpoort Service terminal on Guam moved to the naval air station there. The Army also will move out of Adak in the Aleutians, leaving the Navy operating the base. An Army-operated port in Guam will be transferred to the Navy, and eventually the Army may move out of Guam entirely, Gen. J. Lawton Collins, Army Chief of Staff, said.

All of the Joint Chiefs commented on the bad housing situation in Okinawa, Japan, Guam and Kwajalein. Gen. Hoyt. S. Vandenberg, Air Force chief of staff, said bad housing was the reason given by 95 percent of USAF men who refuse to reinlist.

the solution is for this country to take the lead in forming a union of the Atlantic powers.

"Such a union would be so powerful and prosperous that the pull on all non-Communist countries and on the Russian satellite countries themselves would be so much greater from the west than from the east that such countries would in time gravitate to the west," Clayton told a Senate Foreign Relations Subcommittee.

"Russia would be compelled to return to her prewar boundaries."

Clayton is president of the Atlantic Union Committee, which advocates a federation among the North Atlantic powers. He gave his views to a subcommittee which is studying proposals for strengthening the United Nations.

Clayton said an Atlantic union—which would have a single currency, no trade barriers and a single foreign policy—would give the Western powers a "preponderance of strength" in the cold war.

He said Russia will not start a shooting war unless her leaders think they can win. So long as both sides continue to build up their strength "to see which can be better prepared, war is inevitable in time," he said.

Support for an alternate proposal came from other witnesses, including Senator Ferguson (R., Mich.). Ferguson is one of the sponsors of a proposal to restrict the veto power in the U. N., strengthen the world court and establish a police force to keep world peace.

Double Rites Slated For Curley Children

Boston, Feb. 13 (U.P.).—Double funeral services will be held here tomorrow for former Mayor James M. Curley's son and daughter, who died 14 hours apart of cerebral hemorrhages.

President Truman and hundreds of others wired condolences and thousands of persons filed through Curley's home to pray before the caskets of Mrs. Mary Curley Donnelly, 41, and Leo F. Curley, 34.

Both died Saturday in Mrs. Donnelly's apartment at the same telephone table. They were the sixth and seventh of Curley's nine children to die.

Move to Left Seen If Labor Party Wins

London, Feb. 13 (AP).—Clement Attlee probably will form a cabinet with a slightly-more-to-the-left look if Labor wins Britain's February 23 election.

The Prime Minister's aides forecast about 8 changes in the structure of the 18-man cabinet. They expect about the same number of switches among the 16 ministers who are not members of the cabinet.

Some changes under study:

Transfer of Aneurin Bevan, leader of Labor's left, from the Health Ministry to a higher and more political office.

Promotion of Food Minister John Strachey and War Minister Emanuel Shinwell to cabinet rank where they would reinforce Bevan.

Bevan's rising influence apparently would replace the declining power of Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin.

The ailing Bevin, who leads the cabinet's right-wing bloc, is expected to leave the foreign office for a domestic portfolio.

His close friend and longtime supporter, A. V. Alexander, has been sent to the House of Lords in what may be a step to removing him from the post of Defense Minister.

Another Bevin follower, Arthur Creech Jones, is not expected to return to the Colonial Office.

Chancellor of the Exchequer Sir Stafford Cripps, Deputy Prime Minister Herbert Morrison, Attorney General Hartley Shawcross and Bevan have all been mentioned as likely candidates for Bevin's job of Foreign Secretary.

Churchill Would Stop Cold War, Says Eden

London, Feb. 13 (U.P.).—Winston Churchill was hailed today as the only world leader who could stop the East-West cold war—and as one who might make the attempt if he is returned to power in the general elections.

Anthony Eden, deputy Conservative leader, hinted that Churchill might make a bold and dramatic move to end the so-far bloodless fight between Russia and the West.

Speaking at an election rally at Radford, Eden referred to the atomic arms race and new weapons of mass destruction.

"When we come to consider the stage of these world events," Eden said, "there is no figure anywhere who compares in stature and in authority with Mr. Churchill.

"I am quite sure that we must make the attempt (to reverse the trend) and make it soon," he continued, and said of Churchill:

"His name and fame are revered in every land. No one, I believe, is better placed to rally the world to a sense of its dangers and its opportunities."

Large Limestone Rock Slide Blocks Canal Rd.; More Must Fall Before Clearance Starts

The Washington Post

Tons of decayed limestone cover half of Canal rd. after early-morning slide

A rock slide of 100 tons of decayed limestone blocked Canal rd. nw. yesterday and prompted District highway officials to seek an even greater slide before they clear it.

The first slide occurred shortly after 5 a. m., and engineers then discovered a large crack in other dirt and rock on the high ledge from which the first slide occurred.

J. M. Robertson, District director of highways, after consultation with other engineers, summoned a fire engine company. He said the engine company is pumping water from the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal nearby, into the crack so the rest of the menacing earth and stone will come loose.

Meanwhile, engineers of the Capital Transit Co. put a 24-hour watch on tracks of its Glen Echo-Cabin John streetcar line which passes about 40 feet from the site of the cliff break. Robertson said they anticipate no danger and no tieup, but put on the watch as a precautionary step.

He said that as soon as the remaining crumbling rock and dirt comes down, the Highway Department will clear the slide and reopen Canal rd. The slide is in the 4300 block, but the street was closed by police from Foxhall rd. to Reservoir rd.

Robertson said that Canal rd. probably will be closed for at least two more days.

He said engineers will not know cause of the slide "until we get well into it and see what is there."

McGrath Calls for 'Vigor' In Prosecuting Vote Frauds

By The Associated Press

Attorney General J. Howard McGrath yesterday called for the most vigorous possible prosecution of voting frauds in this election year.

Addressing the annual conference of United State District Attorneys gathered from all parts of the country, McGrath told of a conversation with President Truman when he was named to the Cabinet late last summer. He quoted Mr. Truman as having instructed him to "carry forward the American tradition of carefully safeguarding the rights of every individual in this time in history when we are trying to sell democracy."

McGrath called attention to the coming elections and went on:

"We hold one of the most sacred individual rights to be the right to vote according to one's convictions—and a corresponding right is the fair and honest counting of these votes.

"Our jurisdiction in election matters is limited, but I count upon the United States Attorneys in this year to do everything within their power to guarantee Federal Government wherever necessary in order to guarantee that sacred right."

McGrath, who resigned the chairmanship of the Democratic National Committee to become Attorney General added:

"I can understand, but have no respect for, a man who might seize power by force and revolution—but I have nothing but utter contempt for a man who accepts a public office stolen at the ballot boz . . ."

"Communism cannot survive where honest elections exist—not only in this country but in any country."

It's Truman In '52, Says George Luckey

By Edward T. Folliard
Post Reporter

A Truman-in-'52 boom was touched off in the White House lobby yesterday.

George Luckey, wealthy cattleman and vice chairman of the California Democratic Central Committee, called on President Truman and afterward predicted that he would run for another term and would be elected.

"He's my boy," said Luckey. "I'm all for him."

There was some confusion about Mr. Truman's attitude. Reporters understood Luckey to say that after he had told the President he wanted him to run again, the President said: "Maybe so. If we have the same team next time, maybe we can do something."

No Such Remark, He Says Later

However, in his room at the Statler an hour or so later, Luckey insisted he hadn't asked the President to run again, and therefore, the President hadn't made such a remark.

Luckey, here for the $100-a-plate Jefferson-Jackson Day dinner Thursday night, said he went to the White House unannounced, and asked Mr. Truman to attend the American Legion Convention in Los Angeles in September.

"I told the reporters that he said he would be happy to attend if he could get away. They wanted to know what else. I said, 'Do you want a good story? I just got through talking to the next President of the United States.'

"They wanted to know what he said. I said I also told him that if we had the same team again, we would go places. They asked me what I meant by the same team, and I said the people."

"Didn't Talk Politics"

Luckey wound up by saying at the Statler that he didn't talk politics with the Chief Executive, "not even California politics."

But there was no doubt in his mind, Luckey said, that Mr. Truman would be the Democratic standard-bearer again. He said he knew of no one else in the party who could fill his shoes. He didn't think Mr. Truman's age—he will be 68 in 1952—was important.

"I was astonished at his appearance," Luckey said of the President." His spirits are high and his color is good. He looks like a man of 50."

When the Truman Special was returning to Washington from Missouri, just after the 1848 election, an authorized spokesman told reporters the President would not care for another term. Subsequently, Mr. Truman himself made some remarks that seemed to confirm this. Lately, however, his intimates have said they don't know what the President will do in '52, and they add that they don't think he knows either.

Court Will Be Given Copy of House Record

By The Associated Press

A deadlock between the House and Federal District Court over records sought by the defense in the Harold Christoffel perjury retrial may be eased Tuesday, it was indicated last night.

The House for the third time blocked sending to the court the minutes book of the House Labor Committee before which Christoffel on March 1, 1947 denied that he had been a Communist. He is charged with lying in so doing.

However, the House did approve a resolution authorizing the clerk of the House, Ralph R. Roberts, to bring to the court certified copies of the minutes book of the public meetings only.

Judge F. Dickinson Letts indicated last Friday that certified copies would be acceptable to him. He may accept these when the trial resumes Tuesday.

Defense Attorney C. John Rogge insists, however, he wants the original book, including minutes of executive sessions for the day Christoffel testified and other days as well.

Chairman Lesinski (D., Mich.) of the Labor Committee told the House that actually no minutes were kept of the executive session that followed Christoffel's testimony that March day three years ago.

Lesinski said he was unable to understand the insistence of the court that the minutes be produced.

They simply do not exist, he said.

Letts recessed the trial until Tuesday morning when Rogge said he could proceed no further without the records.

Rogge says the minutes book will aid him in his attempt to prove that a committee quorum was not present to hear Christoffel. The Supreme Court reversed Christoffel's conviction in 1948 on the grounds no proof had been given a quorum was there.

The jury in the present trial has heard testimony from 14 members of that committee that they did hear the defendant make his alleged perjurious staeements. The committee at the time was checking on alleged Communist inroads into labor unions.

Earlier in the day six defense witnesses from Milwaukee told the jury that Christoffel had either a "good" or "excellent" reputation for truthfulness.

The six—Elmer Eddy, Harry Ferg, Frank Krostag, Henry Reither, Harry Suleski and Arnold J. Vogel—said they were or had been members of Local 248 UAW-CIO at the Allis-Chalmers Co. plant. Christoffel formerly was president of the local for several years.

They all testified under questioning by Rogge that they had at no time been requested by Christoffel to join the Communist Party. They also stated they never heard the defendant praise the Soviet Union or advocate Communist Party policies.

Krogstad, however, under cross-examination by John S. Pratt, chief Government prosecutor, said that he himself had signed a nominating petition for Sigmund Eisenscher as a Communist Party candidate for Governor of Wisconsin.

Pratt showed him a photostatic copy of a nominating petition for Eisenscher and asked "Is that your signature?"

"It looks like it," Krogstad said. "I must have signed it. When it comes to a campaign it is my privilege to sign what I please. It is a free country."

Denies Rape

Youth Admits Slaying of N. Y. Woman

HARLEY LAMARR
. . . Cherokee, 19, held

Buffalo, N. Y., Feb. 13 (U.P.).—Harley Lamarr, 19, a full-blooded Cherokee Indian, confessed today that he shot to death a socially prominent Buffalo clubwoman while robbing her of $6 to "pay for my stepfather's funeral expenses."

Lamarr, a moon-faced youth of medium build with long black hair and piercing dark eyes, was lodged in the same jail with his mother after he admitted the slaying of Mrs. Marion B. Frisbee, 36, wife of the sales manager of a local carbonated beverage firm. Mrs. Frisbee's body was found in a ditch Sunday.

Lamarr's mother, Mrs. Amelia Paliwodzinski, 50, is in jail awaiting sentencing Friday for second degree manslaughter in the fatal stabbing last January 8 of Lamarr's stepfather, John, 52.

The youth, an unemployed railroad laborer with a reformatory record for auto theft, was arrested early today by the same two policemen who took his mother into custody a month ago.

At police headquarters, Lamarr readily admitted the crime. He calmly related how he forced his way into Mrs. Frisbee's sedan Saturday night, ordered her to drive to an isolated suburban area, and then "accidentally" shot her during a struggle. He denied raping her.

ECA to Buy Sugar

Frankfurt, Germany, Feb. 13 (AP).—The Economic Cooperation Administration has authorized an expenditure of more than 35 million dollars in the past two weeks for sugar for West Germany. The ECA reported today that $21,260,000 worth would be purchased in the United States, Puerto Rico and Hawaii with European Recovery funds.

Peurifoy Denies State Dept. Harbors Reds

By David McConnell
New York Herald Tribune News Service

Charges that there are 57 card-carrying Communists in the State Department were called "without foundation in fact" yesterday by John Peurifoy, Deputy Undersecretary of State for Administration.

In a sharply worded prepared statement Peurifoy called on the author of the charges—Senator Joseph R. McCarthy (R., Wis.) to substantiate them "if you have this information." In a telegram, sent Saturday, to Senator McCarthy, the State Department official said that "I assume that you have given your information to the Federal Bureau of Investigation."

The telegram also asserted that "as a loyal American you owe it to your country to inform the officials responsible for any such characters existing in the Government." In a talk Sunday in Reno, Nev., Senator McCarthy named four persons with State Department connections but said he was not calling them traitors or Communists.

In addition to saying there are 57 card carrying Communists in the State Department, Senator McCarthy also asserted that some 300 employes have been certified to Secretary of State Dean Acheson by the President's loyalty board for termination as disloyal. To this Peurifoy replied:

"The Department has no such figures in its possession and knows of no Communists who are presently employed. The loyalty review board of the Civil Service Commission has never recommended termination of any employe of the Department of State."

Peurifoy said that to date he has received no reply from Senator McCarthy, whose office said he was out of town yesterday.

The State Department official took up one by one the four persons named Sunday by Senator McCarthy in his Reno speech.

The first, John S. Service, is the only one of those named still employed by the State Department, he said. Service is en route to Calcutta to serve there as United States consul. He was reinstated by the department in August, 1945, four days after a Federal grand jury had cleared him of connection with the publication of confidential information which appeared in the magazine "Amerasia." Before he was reemployed his case was reviewed by the security officer of the department and the loyalty security board, Peurifoy said.

Gusatavo Duran, employed until 1945 with the auxiliary foreign service, and Mrs. Mary Jane Keeney, connected with the department for four months only because it absorbed the Foreign Economic Administration, are no longer with State, he said.

Dr. Harlow Sharpley, head of the Harvard Observatory, never was employed by the department although he is a member of the national commission of the United Nations Economic and Social Counsel. He also served in 1945 as a member of the American delegation at the UNESCO conference in London.

Buckingham Ask Increase In Rentals

Rent increases for all 1822 units in Buckingham Community, Arlington apartment development, have been asked in a petition filed with the Alexandria-Arlington Rent Control Office.

The management's petition, which did not specify the amount of increase being asked, cited higher tax, fuel and payroll costs as justifying higher rentals.

I. Chance Buchanan, director of the Rent Control Office, said an examiner will inspect the records of the apartment development and make recommendations on which he will base his decision.

Present rentals at Buckingham Community range from about $50 to $60 for one-bedroom units, $55 to $72 for two bedrooms and $89 to $100 for three bedroms. The owner is Mrs. Allie S. Freed.

Ban on Hiring Halls Upheld by High Court

By the United Press

The Supreme Court refused yesterday to overrun a ban on Great Lakes union hiring halls, and a CIO maritime union official said the decision eventually may lead to a tieup of all United States merchant shipping.

The tribunal refused to review a lower court ruling upholding a National Labor Relations Board order banning seamen's hiring halls as operated in the Great Lakes area.

The NLRB had forbidden the Great Lakes hiring hall system on grounds it discriminated against nonunion members—a practice barred by the Taft-Hartley labor law.

Government labor experts said the effect of the ruling is to outlaw any hiring hall which discriminates against nonunion members, a feature of most hiring halls.

Hoyt S. Haddock, legislative representative of the National Maritime Union, told a reporter that unless Congress acts quickly to legalize hiring halls, "you are going to have all United States shipping tied up."

He said the court decision would outlaw all hiring halls, something no maritime union would stand for.

"It's the only type of union security they can have," he said.

Haddock said hiring halls eliminated "shanghai-ing" of seamen, gave men a place to get berths instead of having to "ship off the dock," and cut down on "brothels and crimp houses" where seamen had to buy drinks and give bribes to get choice ship assignments.

Virginia House Votes For Mine Seizure Bill

Richmond, Feb. 13 (AP).—The Virginia House of Delegates today passed and sent to the Senate a bill to give the Governor authority to order state seizure of coal mines during an emergency if necessary to safeguard the welfare of the people.

By a vote of 84 to 12—sufficient for passage with an emergency clause to make it effective when adopted by the Senate and signed by the Governor—the bill was approved substantially in its original form. It was sponsored by Delegate John B. Boatwright of Buckingham County.

372,000 Idle In Coal Fields

unions did not receive telegraphed work orders because Western Union offices are closed weekends.

Other UMW leaders quoted miners as saying they are idle because they are celebrating Lewis' seventieth birthday.

But a sampling of rank-and-file sentiment showed a grim determination to stay away from the mines until a contract is won. A UMW local officer in western Pennsylvania said his men wouldn't even come to a meeting to talk about returning to work.

"They said they voted before not to work without a contract and there was no reason to do it over again."

The Western Pennsylvania Coal Operators Association wired the Justice Department its members had their mines open and ready for normal production "in full compliance" with court orders, but the miners failed to show. They said the pits will stay ready for production.

A miner near Grundy, W. Va., commented:

"They must think we are fools to go to work without a contract. If we get a stock of coal, they (operators) won't give John L. a chance."

The miners are a grim lot now. There's no food in the house of many. Credit has long been used up. They feel they're fighting on their own now and that it no longer is just a union affair.

Said Miner Paul Truckley of Curtisville, Pa.:

"Truman gave the operators an ace in the hole.

"They knew Lewis either had to order us back or leave us wide open to an injunction.

"In my opinion, the men are solidly opposed to going back without a contract."

Added a miner at Russelton, Pa.:

"The injunction won't mine coal and we know it. That Taft-Hartley business is foolish. No contract, no work."

President Dave Fowler of UMW District 21 in Oklahoma and Arkansas foresaw continuation of the strike, declaring:

"Some of the miners feel the Government is trying to make convicts out of them.

"The miners fought for 50 years to get their union.

"They don't want it stolen away from them and be reduced to slaves."

It is not known what action the Government will take if the miners continue on strike. Justice Department officials with the job of enforcing court orders issued under the Taft-Hartley act did not choose to discuss the matter.

Comment on mine field picketing also was cautious.

Pickets caused minor trouble at a mine near Richmond, W. Va., where one small independent operator was reported to have been "roughed up." He did not require hospital treatment.

Reporters who asked the Justice Department whether picketing violated the stop-strike court order were told:

"The court has issued an order to restrain a strike and the order speaks for itself."

Under the court order, miners were forbidden to strike and warned against "engaging in, permitting or encouraging the said strike or its continuation, in whole or in part."

The strike is complete among UMW miners not covered by new contracts in West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Indiana, Illinois, Alabama, Ohio, Tennessee and other important coal States. Lewis has signed contracts covering 40,000 miners.

Coal shortages born of the walkout continued to pinch the national economy. Some 36,000 are jobless in coal-using industries.

Accounting Asked

Miner's Suit On Welfare Fund Upheld

By The Associated Press

Federal Judge Burnita Matthews yesterday refused to throw out a former miner's suit demanding an accounting of how John L. Lewis and other trustees have spent 150 million dollars paid into the coal miners' welfare fund in the last three years.

Attorneys for Lewis had asked dismissal of the suit brought last September by George Livengood of Smithfield, Pa. Livengood was expelled from the United Mine Workers after he brought the suit.

Judge Matthews ordered that Lewis, as chairman of trustees, turn over to Livengood all the original agreements, resolutions, records, rules and regulations, and annual audits of the trustees.

The judge turned down a motion from Livengood's attorneys that he also be given a look at the applications acted upon by the trustees in granting disability, death and pension and medical and hospital benefits to 606,000 persons. They contended inspection of these records would show that benefits went to persons not entitled to them.

Oil Workers' $125 Pension Plan Drafted

The CIO Oil Workers' International Union yesterday announced it had reached a conditional agreement with the Sinclair Refining Company and Sinclair Oil and Gas Company on a pension plan that would provide a minimum of $125 a month, including Social Security.

The plan is contingent on (1) ratification by the union's membership, and (2) Senate approval of House-passed legislation that would raise Social Security benefits.

The $125 monthly minimum pension would apply to employes 65 years old with 20 years' service with Sinclair.

Workers could be pensioned after 15 years of service on reaching 65 years of age, and also be pensioned at an age earlier than 65.

O. A. Knight, the union's president, said the agreement, if it goes into effect, will cover more than 10,000 Sinclair employes.

Pilots Call for Independent Air Safety Board to Cut Toll

The Air Lines Pilot Association yesterday urged Congress to recreate an independent air safety board.

Creation of such a board, the pilots said, would greatly reduce the death toll from air disasters.

The pilots' position was outlined by the association president, David L. Behncke, before a House Commerce subcommittee. He endorsed a bill by Representative Robert Crosser (D., Ohio) to reestablish the Federal air safety board which was abolished June 30, 1940.

CAB methods of investigating air crashes are "loosely-knit, faulty and improper," Behncke charged.

Behncke's chief point was summed up in the statement that "no man should sit in judgment in his own cause."

"For example," he said, "it is inconceivable that any man or any regulatory agency that has stipulated and approved the airworthiness requirements of any air lines" aircraft will come forth with recommendations to prove that its airworthiness requirements are inadequate and that he himself or they themselves have made mistakes.

"An organization which drafts the rules and regulations covering our air transportation industry as does the Civil Aeronautics Board and an organization that implements and enforces such rules, such as the Civil Aeronautics Administration, are not likely, irrespective of what they may say before your committee to place such rules and such implementation and such enforcement on trial in the event of an air accident."

Lane to Allot Emergency Relief Funds of $87,100

Annapolis, Md., Feb. 13 (AP).—Governor Lane agreed to an emergency allotment of $87,100 for Marylanders on relief today. Amendments to the department's current budget will provide the money, Lane said.

The Governor's announcement followed a report by State Welfare Director J. Milton Patterson that his department has 1077 applications for relief that would have to be shelved without additional funds.

Lane disclosed he agreed to the $87,100 grant after conferences with Patterson and Budget Director James G. Rennie.

Emergency money will come from three sources, Lane said: from a reserve to offset expenditure of federal funds which the Government will not authorize, $24,000; from unspent balances in local administration accounts, $45,000, and from sums returned by old-age assistance receipients, $18,100.

Mt. Pleasant Group Rejects Home Rule

After listening to the pros and cons of the Kefauver bill, the Mount Pleasant Citizens Association last night rejected both home rule and the Kefauver bill.

About 60 persons voted after Harry N. Stull, chairman of the suffrage committee of the Federation of Citizens Associations defended the bill, and Edward F. Colladay, general counsel of the Board of Trade, blasted it.

Colladay said the Senate-approved bill now bottled up in the House District Committee would put the city under the domination of "short time, one year residents" with which "the present administration has loaded the government."

Political Appointees

Under the Kefauver bill, he said, "these short time residents could vote a bond issue, then go home and let you pay it."

The bill calls for the appointment of two city councillors by the President. These, Colladay said, would be political appointees and would dominate the council.

But, he said, the commissioners who have run the city since the 1870s "have all been distinguished men."

His opponent argued that the city's commissioners, good or bad, "have been wished on us by the political party in power."

Stull said the bill was consistent with the home rule plank in the Republican Party platform which Colladay helped to draft.

Amendments Needed

"I'm not in agreement with some of the provisions of the bill and would like to see it amended," Stull said, "and it is going to be amended if it ever gets to the floor of the House."

A petition to take the measure out of the committee to the House floor has 135 of the required 218 signatures.

Colladay disavowed any fear of Negro domination of the city. He said he considered the "colored man of the District, the real colored man who works for you and me" superior to the foreign-born elements of the populous cities.

The Board of Trade spokesman urged citizens to get behind the Neely-Teague resolutions calling for national representation for Washington while Congress is aroused on the issue of home rule.

S.E. Business Men

Use of a Massachusetts ave. site for the proposed new bridge across the Anacostia River instead of the East Capitol st. site was indorsed last night by the Southeast Business Men's Association.

At a meeting at 314 Pennsylvania ave. se., members said they felt the Massachusetts ave. structure would cost only about half as much as the East Capitol st. site. Further, the latter would jeopardize plans for a stadium.

The association appointed a committee headed by Charles Gunn to plan a drive for improvement of dwellings in the Southeast area similar to activity in Georgetown in the past 10 years.

West End

Proposed transfer of Central High to use of Cardozo students was protested last night by the West End Citizens Association.

Meeting in the 3d Precinct, the membership authorized President Walter F. Wasson to express the organization's displeasure in a letter to the Board of Education. Wasson was also directed to appear at the next public hearing on the issue.

The organization also voted to thank the Superintendent of Streets and Highways for recent installation of sidewalks in the area.

American U. Park

A proposal to establish a golf range off Massachusetts ave. and Ward Circle was voted down yesterday at a meeting of the American University Park Citizens Association.

At a well-attended meeting at Hurst Hall in American University, the organization also enjoyed an illustrated lecture on rose culture by Charles C. Montgomery, president of the Potomac Rose Society. He was assisted by Niels J. Hansen and Arthur C. Barrett.

Burleith

A motion to allow delegates to the Federation of Citizens Association to vote on any matter which did not require full membership approval was passed last night by the Burleith Citizens Association.

The organization, meeting at Gordon Junior High School, 35th and T sts. nw., also saw a motion picture showing backstage operations of the Telephone Hour radio show.

Glover Park

By the close vote of 24 to 20, the Glover Park Citizens Association last night disapproved the Kefauver bill for home rule.

The ballot was taken after a speech by association President Thomas B. Scott, who urged passage of the measure.

Members who met at the Stoddert School, 40th and Calvert sts. nw., also heard E. C. Giddings, vice president of Capital Transit Co., explain the need for increased transit fares.

Hillcrest Association

Members of the Hillcrest Citizens Association last night urged the realty tax in the District be reduced by 15 cents per 100-dollar evaluation and that Central High School be maintained as a school for white children.

Meeting at the East Washington Baptist Church, Branch and Alabama aves. se., the group indorsed the nomination of Walter M. Bird, president of the Shepherd Park Citizens Association, for the Junior Chamber of Commerce award.

ITU Progressives Holding Big Lead In Indorsements

Indianapolis, Feb. 13 (AP).—Don Hurd, secretary-treasurer of the International Typographical Union, today said reports received from about one third of the locals give Progressive party candidates nearly a two-to-one lead over Independent party candidates seeking indorsements for election as international officers.

A candidate must received the indorsement of 50 locals for president, first vice president and secretary-treasurer, and 20 indrosements for all other offices in order to have his name placed on the ballots for election May 17.

Woodruff Randolph, incumbent president and head of the Progressive party, has received 136 indorsements, Hurd said. C. J. Sparkman of Detroit, Independent candidate, has received 74, and Jesse B. Manbeck of Washington, has received 7.

Hurd, a candidate for relection as secretary-treasurer on the Progressive ticket, has received 159 indorsements, and George Bante, Chicago, Independent candidate, has 79.

Bills to Add Area Judges Approved

By a Post Reporter

Richmond, Va., Feb. 13.—Bills to provide additional judges for the Virginia area near Washington were approved by a Senate committee today, while the Senate passed the Fenwick measure to give "borderline reciprocity" to District physicians.

The Senate committee for courts of justice:

1. Reported favorably, 11-0, a bill by Senators Charles R. Fenwick of Arlington, and Andrew W. Clark of Alexandria, to authorize an additional judge for the county of Arlington, a circuit in itself, and for the circuit embracing Fairfax, Prince William and the city of Alexandria.

2. Reported favorably, 8-3, a bill by Senator Andrew W. Clarke, of Alexandria, to permit assignment of an additional corporation court judge to cities of 60, or more inhabitants, providing the need is certified by the Supreme Court of Appeals.

The Fenwick borderline reciprocity bill, sent to the House by unanimous vote of the upper chamber, provides that District physicians may treat patients in Virginia upon payment of a $1 license fee. They would not be permitted to establish offices in the State without filing a certificate of registration, which carries a $50 license fee.

Another Fenwick bill was passed by the Senate with the closest favorable vote recorded by that body this sesion of the General Assembly. By 23-14, the Senate approved the bill which would prevent revocation of a Virginian's driver's permit for a period longer than that required in any other State in which he might be convicted of drunk driving.

House Quintet Plans Boycott

last night and found the following committee members would be out of town or "unavoidably detained" from today's scheduled District meeting. Representatives Frank Buchanan (D., Pa), George P. Miller (D., Calif.), Arthur G. Klein (D., N. Y.) and John F. Kennedy (D., Mass.).

Another home rule backer, Representative James C. Auchincloss (R., N. J.) is in New Jersey and will not return to the Capitol until noon today, it was learned.

Purpose of the no-attendance strategy, Granger said, is to prevent a working committee quorum, and thus prevent the committee from acting formally on any legislation.

Granger said he was confident Chairman John L. McMillan could not muster the necessary 13 members for today's meeting, but said either he or Representative Miller would attend to make a point of no quorum.

The closed full committee meeting was originally set for yesterday but postponed because McMillan could not master a quorum.

As things stand, McMillan has only two bills ready for floor consideration Wednesday, if he is then recognized. They are one to incorporate the Girl Scouts, listing more than 50 charter members, and another requiring American citizenship for doctors seeking licenses to practice here.

Unless McMillan can obtain full committee action today on more controversial measures, such as one year's extension of local rent control, daylight-saving time or expansion of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, he will have only the above two minor bills on which to stave off Chairman Lesinksi.

"The District Committee should not get involved in this Wednesday calendar procedure," Granger commented finally.

the local advisory board are "both on record" in favor of rent control in Arlington for the time being, Fenwick told the committee.

Last-Minute Amendment

The Moncure amendment to exclude localities near Washington from sweeping repeal was tacked on to the Boatwright bill in a last-minute appeal on the House floor.

It came after Navy and Marine Corps officers from Quantico had told a joint committee hearing that the rent situation near the Quantico Marine base is a "scab on the fair face of Virginia."

Witnesses from the nearby Virginia area of Washington presented an urgent plea that the "local option" phase of the Federal law be retained for their localities.

Spokesmen for the Virginia real estate interests contended that statistics show there is "plenty of housing" available on the Virginia side of the Potomac River.

If the Senate accepts its committee's recommendations, the bill will then go to a conference committee of both houses to resolve any differences.

Tax Hearing Protests Aired

Meanwhile, theater and hotel owners and operators furnished the only opposition this afternoon at a public hearing on the series of bills carrying out recommendations of the Gray commission which studied State and local revenues.

Theater operators protested bills to allow counties, cities and towns impose an amusement tax. They contended such a tax would decrease the number of theater admissions and was discriminatory.

Hotel men contended that the bills allowed a ten percent tax on their restaurant business but only five percent on utilities. They contended the restaurant business was not profitable in hotels but a "necessary evil" of the business.

Falls Church Elects 2 to Council

A Government official and a real estate broker were elected to the Falls Church City Council last night to fill vacancies created by recent resignations.

They were Karl Anderson, 44, chief of the British Commonwealth branch of the Commerce Department's office of international trade, and Carl Hink, 36, associated with the Stanley Rowland real estate firm. Council may elect members to fill unexpired terms under a charter provision.

Anderson succeeds D. Kemper Krille, who resigned because he planned to move from Falls Church. Hink replaces Mandley T. Rust, who relinquished his seat because of business.

Both will serve until June, 1951, when, under a proposed new city council, a seven-man board will be chosen to replace the present nine-member body.

Council awarded a $3500 contract to the Lynchburg, Va., investment firm of Scott, Horner and Mason to handle sales negotiations of Falls Church's $700,000 school improvement bond issue. The firm was one of four to submit bids.

Council deferred a request from Representative Howard W. Smith (D., Va.) that it take a stand on a proposed amendment to extend the authority of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission to nearby Maryland and Virginia. The matter was referred to the city planning commission for study and recommendations.

Special Election Today Will Fill Bates' Seat

Salem, Mass., Feb. 13 (U.P.).—A young naval officer and a veteran Democrat, both sons of famous fathers, oppose each other Tuesday in a special election to fill the congressional seat vacated by the death of Representative George J. Bates (R., Mass.).

Bates' eldest son, Navy Lieut. Comdr. William H. Bates, 32, a political novice, will oppose Richard M. Russell of Essex, thrice Cambridge mayor and former Democratic Congressman, in the historic Sixth Massachusetts District, where the term "gerrymander" originated in 1812.

Liverpool
for convenience

BRITANNIC means LUXURY. Completely redesigned, the passenger capacity of this 27,666-ton motor-liner has been reduced by one-third to provide spacious luxury, comparable only with the famous "Queens". A health-giving week at sea gives executives welcome breathing space for tying up business details in an atmosphere of refreshing relaxation. For the family too . . . children's playrooms, indoor swim-pool, parquet dance floors, gymnasium, beauty parlors and acres of sports space. And there's Cunard White Star's unexcelled service and cuisine . . . making your voyage a genuine vacation, be you business or pleasure bound.

LIVERPOOL means CONVENIENCE . . . and it's served by three popular ships, BRITANNIC, MEDIA and PARTHIA. Front door to Britain's industrial Midlands, Liverpool is also the ideal springboard for a countrywide tour. A stone's throw from the Welsh Mountains... a morning's trip to the Lake District... a mere afternoon to Glasgow, gateway to the Highlands . . . even London itself is only 4 hours by rail. For businessmen and vacationists alike, the New York-Liverpool Route saves hurry, saves money, saves time in Britain.

Screening Crime

The issue of how the district attorney's office handles complaints ought to be only a sidelight in the probe that is being carried on by the House District Crime Investigating Committee. But in this connection several important questions have been raised, and apparently the United States attorney's office favors some kind of improvement in the present system. That office is now serving a dual function—deciding what cases should be prosecuted as well as doing the actual prosecuting. Perhaps the two functions cannot be separated, but we surmise that a few magistrates authorized to hear complaints and decide what charges should be pressed, if any, might be a useful addition to the judicial system.

One thing is certain: someone must exercise discretion in connection with every complaint that is made before it can be submitted to a court. If every report of a crime reaching the prosecutor's office had to be laid before a judge, the courts would bog down within a week. Many of these complaints are utterly trivial. Others do not constitute a violation of law. In other instances evidence is so meager that it would be a waste of time to submit the case to a judge or jury. The decision as to what action shall be taken has been traditionally left to the prosecuting officer, and on the whole those officers have probably been as faithful to their trust as have judges on the bench.

In the course of deciding whether a case shall be prosecuted, however, the United States attorney's office finds it necessary to conduct numerous hearings. In effect these are little preliminary trials. Would it not be better in cases of this sort to have a judicial officer conduct the hearing and make the decision as to whether the evidence warranted prosecution of the case? The result might be to complicate the prosecution of criminal charges and to slow down the administration of justice. But it would relieve the prosecutors of a heavy burden, and it would probably give the public more confidence that decisions were being made on a basis of complete impartiality. The idea seems to be worth expert examination.

Sewer Politics

In place of the 57-gun salute he promised the State Department, Senator McCarthy blew up four empty paper bags—all of which failed to produce even so much as a pop. In a speech at Wheeling, W. Va., Thursday night, the Senator declared he had a list of 205 persons working for the State Department who were known by the Secretary of State to be members of the Communist Party. He also sent a telegram to the President declaring that "we have been able to compile a list of 57 Communists in the State Department." After this build-up he made another speech on Sunday at Reno, Nev., and said: "Now I know it is very easy for anyone to condemn a particular bureau or department in general terms. Therefore, I would like to cite some specific cases." He cited four out of the 57 or, if you prefer, out of the 205.

Of the four persons he named, one has never been a State Department employe. Two others have not been in the department since 1946. The fourth is a trusted member of the foreign service. When he had completed his speech, Senator McCarthy was asked by a reporter if, as the text of his speech indicated, he had called these four persons traitors. "I did not," he said. "And you will notice I didn't call them Communists, either." Rarely has a man in public life crawled and squirmed so abjectly.

The one person in Mr. McCarthy's unimpressive list of four who is now an official of the State Department is John S. Service. He was made the target of accusations several years ago in connection with the Amerasia incident and, after a grand jury had returned a no true bill relating to the charges against him, upon investigation, was completely exonerated and reinstated with the express approval of Secretary Byrnes. His sin in Mr. McCarthy's eyes, of course, is that he was among the experienced China hands who gave the department warning long ago that the Chiang Kai-shek regime lacked competence and stability. Because his foresight has now been thoroughly vindicated, he has earned the enmity of the China interventionists on Capitol Hill. They seem determined to drive out of the Far Eastern Division, where they are desperately needed, all the men whose knowledge, experience and integrity make them unwilling to subscribe to the fiction that Chiang Kai-shek is a peerless leader capable of stemming the Communist tide in the Orient. But only Mr. McCarthy, let us hope, would stoop so low as to rake up an antiquated, exploded charge to impugn the loyalty of a man with whom he disagrees.

The two former State Department employes named by the Senator are Gustavo Duran and Mary Jane Keeney. His charges, so far as they are concerned, seem to be merely that they were unfavorably regarded by the House Committee on Un-American Activities. The Senator's fourth victim is Prof. Harlow Shapley, director of the Harvard Observatory and one of the world's great contemporary astronomers. As a private citizen not in the employ of the State Department, Professor Shapley has exercised his indubitable constitutional right to express political views with which, like Senator McCarthy, we disagree. But we should consider it as repugnant to standards of decency to call him disloyal because we think him mistaken as to call Senator McCarthy a Communist because he has resorted to political foul play of a characteristically Communist kind.

Half-Baked Potato

The flow of Canadian potatoes into the United States, while the Government is buying up domestic potatoes, dyeing them blue and dumping them on the ground from which they were recently dug, gives new emphasis to the absurdity of the law the Administration is following. It is estimated that 11 million bushels of Canadian potatoes will be imported this year. As John W. Ball has pointed out, Canadian shippers can pay inspection charges of $5 a car and duty of 75 cents a 100-pound sack and still sell potatoes in this country from 15 to 20 cents a sack below the domestic prices. Not satisfied with this opportunity, many Canadians are smuggling their potatoes across the border into Maine's great potato country and selling them to the Department of Agriculture for dyeing and destruction at twice the price they will bring in the Canadian market!

Efforts are being made to stop the smuggling, but nothing can be done to halt the flow of Canadian potatoes over the tariff wall without making us look ridiculous in the eyes of the world. Under ECA we are bringing pressure on the countries of western Europe to integrate their economies for the sake of building a continental system. Great Britain especially is resisting that integration because she fears that it would seriously interfere with her experiments in a planned economy. At the same time, however, the Administration is making it impossible for the United States itself to move toward freer trade in farm products by putting our agriculture on stilts.

Any day now we shall hear a demand for higher tariffs or a quota system to keep out Canadian potatoes if that cry is not already being sounded. Of course, it does not make sense to import Canadian potatoes while the Government is spending 100 million dollars a year to buy up domestic potatoes and destroy them. But the fault lies in the outrageous and self-defeating policy of pegging domestic prices at the present figure. It is time for the Administration and Congress to realize that we cannot possibly move toward closer economic cooperation with the rest of the world if domestic prices are held at ridiculous levels that invite unwanted imports from other countries at fabulous costs to our own taxpayers.

Defective Law

It is interesting to note that President Truman claims no power to take over the coal mines if the miners should continue their refusal to obey the court injunction. He told his press conference the other day that he has neither the intention nor the power to seize the mines. That is especially notable, because a year ago, when labor legislation was under discussion in Congress, he took it for granted that he would have authority, even with repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, to go into the courts and obtain an injunction to enforce the recommendations of a fact-finding board in any labor dispute causing a national emergency. His assertion of broad executive powers gave rise to a good deal of confusion and no little anxiety. For it obviously involved a far more drastic policy than is embodied in the T-H Act. If injunctions against strikes could be obtained under those circumstances, they would not need to be limited to 80 days.

Now, in addition to acknowledging that he has no power to seize the mines, the President has also acknowledged the usefulness of the meager powers Congress gave him in the T-H Act to deal with national emergencies. That creates a more favorable atmosphere for reconsideration of the whole problem of coping with economic paralysis resulting from strikes and lockouts. It has always seemed to us that the President needs more and not less power in this sphere. But it ought to be power embodied in specific legislation with definite limits and safeguards against abuse.

One other reason that we have often noted for revising the "national emergencies" section of the T-H Act is the impotence that it imposes on boards of inquiry set up under its terms. The board of inquiry in the coal dispute must report again to the President at the end of 60 days, but its report is to be concerned with the positions of the parties, the efforts made for a settlement and the last offer of the employer. There will still be no recommendations from the fact-finders. This is a serious defect in the law. When collective bargaining has been abandoned for coercive maneuvering, it is almost imperative to have recommendations from an expert board in order to focus public sentiment demanding a settlement.

GAS MASK

I found myself in this new task,
Face downward in my grotesque mask.
Down the long line, the figures curled
Like creatures of another world—
Black-faced, huge-eyed, and like me prone
In dew that lay on grass and stone.
It was the morning light that drew
Its fingertips on the thick dew.
And then I saw through my round glass
Amazing pictures come to pass—
Orange and gold on the wet grass.

I shook my head; they were still there
Close to the earth, but hung in air.
They drew their colors fold on fold:
A new, strange country was unrolled.
And with these wonders at my face,
I searched another world in space.

DANIEL SMYTHE

Integration In Europe: Hoffman's Aim

The drip-drip of propaganda from Europe that integration of the European economy is an impossible dream is beginning to make doubting Thomases out of some hitherto converted Americans. Several articles appearing in this country have added to the wonderment. A particularly powerful piece is one by Mr. R. C. Leffingwell in the current Foreign Affairs on "Devaluation and European Recovery." It is now being quoted back at America by the Europeans. Mr. Leffingwell makes mincemeat of the plea for union now. He says:

> Free trade within the United States has been a great blessing to us. But we had no established manufactures to be displaced when we adopted that great principle. Europe, however, has an economic history; it has been a going concern for a long time. The removal of quantitative barriers and lowering of tariffs seems feasible, but free trade as we have it within the United States might mean that some protected industries would collapse in Europe. How then are the necessary migration and resettlement of laborers from the abandoned inefficient plants to be arranged? . . . It seems that a too hurried union would involve a great upheaval, and this at a time of trouble, when every minute counts and every disturbance should be avoided. European union may come by evolution. It can't come by fiat. No shotgun wedding will do the job.

Let us always remember in this connection that there is no alternative policy in Europe to integration. Without it the European nations will sink one by one into economic eclipse or political obliteration or a status of mendicancy on American charity. Difficulties, to be sure, there are, but they are there to be surmounted. No great venture in the world of affairs has ever been achieved by thinking of difficulties. Solution begins with an act of faith, then by perseverance in removing obstacles. This was the approach of Paul-Henri Spaak in embarking upon the Dutch-Belgian-Luxembourg plan for Benelux. It is the mark of the one man in our public life in America who still has a torch in his hand, viz, Paul Hoffman.

Mr. Hoffman is a practical man as well as an idealist; that is to say, he has his "heart in his head." He never forgets the ultimate goal in integration in Europe, keeps the goal always before him, and preaches it 24 hours a day. He is trying to achieve it step by step. However, he frankly acknowledges that even on the first step he has come back from Europe with "minimum accomplishments." Has the fire gone out of his eye because of that? Not at all. His rebuffs have simply served to rivet his faith and stimulate his zeal. Both are catching, and we hope the Congress finds them catching.

To Mr. Hoffman "every minute counts," in Mr. Leffingwell's words—not for hesitation but for action. The degree of integration he wants is far, far less than the Europeans had before the war, though, judging from the current comment, one would think he was asking for the moon. Mr. Leffingwell talks about Europe as "a going concern." Far from it. The phrase could be applied to the condition before the war, but not now. Before the war the Europeans were tied together by the convertibility of their currencies. Mr. Hoffman is not asking for that. He simply pleads for the facilitation of payments as between European countries on their current business. The means would be a clearing union—a tiny step to convertibility. He made this plea when he found that intra-European trade had come to a standstill, and that Europe had disintegrated into more or less going concerns, plural. Mr. Hoffman wants action also to bring to an end dual pricing and quotas which simply back up inconvertibility in freezing trade.

This economic nationalism with which Mr. Hoffman has to contend is worse than anything that used to be damned by the British as Schachtism. Before the war continentalization was flourishing. To be sure, it went under the name of cartellization. But the point is that then there was not the slightest difficulty in organizing integration. Steel, the heart of economic integration, was a prime example. The heavy industry in Europe was as one, with the United States industry itself in a degree of partnership. To be sure, the steel cartel pursued policies of restriction which were contrary to the public interest. But if organization is possible for purposes of restriction, clearly it is possible for purposes of expansion, and one may be sure moreover that no government will ever again allow an industry to unite without supervision.

It is for this reason that Mr. Hoffman, having been discomfited on his present front, might do well to move to the industrial front, with the view of uniting the heavy industry in Europe. It has long been our view that integration must start with the Ruhr. Words frighten easily, and cartel is one of these words; but in the new setting of supervision the word may, like propaganda, acquire a new and a constructive meaning, and lead the way to a Franco-German understanding—the foundation of European political as well as economic integration.

Day Care Centers

Judging from the story in your February 12 issue the District Building is still endeavoring to dodge the child day-care problem as not being welfare work. The same clincher reasons support the day-care program today as during the war. The mother must work, the child must be cared for. If this breaks down, the public assistance division of the Welfare Department will have a full-blown family responsibility at its doorstep (at several times the day-care cost), to say nothing of the casualty to family morale.

JOSEPH D. KAUFMAN,
Former President, Foster Day-Care and Counselling Association.

Parochial School Buses

Dr. Dawson, secretary of Protestants and Other Americans United for the Separation of Church and State, says in a letter of February 8, that his organization "opposes tax-paid buses and text-books for parochial or private schools." Actually it is not the schools but the taxpayers' children attending such schools that would be using the buses and the books. Certainly the law cannot discriminate against a group of taxpayers' children because some religion is taught in their school, provided the school comes up to the legal standards.

But there is another important point. In certain rural areas, parishioners of various denominations build, at great sacrifice, a school of their own for their children and provide, if needed, a bus for transportation. In many cases, however, such an undertaking is financially impossible, especially if a private bus must also be financed, when local law bars parochial-school children from the public-school bus. The outcome is that all the children involved have no choice but to attend the public school.

One hundred dollars or more per year per child is the cost to the school system; in Prince Georges County, according to Mrs. Agnes Meyer, in her article of February 5, it amounts to $142 a child. Dr. Dawson and the POAU with their extreme theories regarding some involvement of church and state would doubtless be willing to pay the price, but few others among taxpayers will fail to note the injustice to the laudable aims of their religious-minded fellow-citizens and the needless added expense to themselves.

Dr. Dawson's letter stated that any Federal aid to education bill must "insure against unlawful diversion of Federal funds for sectarian purposes." I concur! Logic therefore impels me not to join in his opposition to tax paid buses and textbooks for private schools. These benefits could scarcely serve any sectarian purpose.

Let's seek to guarantee the right of all youthful citizens to benefits which would normally accrue not to any institution, but directly to the children themselves.

Medical Education

Our American Medical Association is learning "educational" campaigns are more defensive than offensive. It denies Federal Security Administration's forecast of a 42,000-doctor shortage by 1960. It indignantly resents the charge of rationing medical careers by the Conference of Academic Deans.

Dr. Leonard A. Scheele recently testified our medical schools' gross budget is 50 million dollars; income from tuition and fees 13 million dollars. Tax subsidy is needed to make up the deficit.

Benjamin Fine, education expert of the New York Times, reports one prominent college president told him: "I have no voice whatever in our medical schools. The dean and faculty of the school do whatever they wish. If I should interfere in any way, I would have the Association of Medical Colleges, and maybe the American Medical Association itself, down on me like a ton of bricks."

This indicates many medical schools already are above the suzerainty of their university. AMA editorials indicate they intend so to remain. But permanent relief from bankruptcy by tax subsidy will modify monopolistic concepts of academic freedom. To qualify for tax subsidy these national policies must obtain. Organized medicine will cease to be the sole judge of the Nation's need for doctors. Medical schools must liberalize their admissions to provide equal fair treatment and opportunity for the equally qualified.

Some bitterly will oppose these principles as state control and meddling. They resent national standards that guarantee free and fair competition between all qualified eligibles. It will take more than the Hollywood testimonials of Whitaker & Baxter to win our "educational" campaign.

Inconsiderate Tenants

While I deeply sympathize with the Marines and their families who have to live in such shoddy housing at Quantico (as illustrated by your cameramen in your February 6 issue), I also can understand their landlords' point of view, even though I myself am a renter.

There is such a widespread disregard of others' properties shown by an alarmingly large number of people who rent houses, apartments and rooms, it is little wonder that landlords make no effort to improve their property.

Seemingly many parents make not the slightest effort to control the effacement and destruction of property by their offspring, even in the most modern of apartments. An utter disregard of sanitary facilities by their parents is often the case—apparently an effort to grudgingly "show" the landlord he is not entitled to any consideration because of the amount he charges as rent.

What will happen if controls are lifted?

"CCC Surpluses"

In your February 6 editorial entitled "CCC Surpluses," the idea of the CCC program was described as involving the purchase of surpluses in periods of surplus and the sale of them in periods of scarcity. It seemed to suggest a plan to me.

Instead of the Government buying the surpluses, it would acquire the surpluses by a "tax in kind" on sales, sufficient to remove the surplus and thereby sustain the market price. Then in periods of scarcity the Government would distribute the surplus to the farmers as a sales bounty, or as a return to the farmers it originally taxed.

"Would Be Gentleman"

It seems to me most unfortunate that at this time, when the whole Nation is looking upon its Capital City as shockingly devoid of cultural advantages in the dramatic arts, Mr. Richard L. Coe should have indulged himself in an attempt at adolescent humor at the expense of so fine a production of Molière's Would-Be Gentleman as is presently being given by the drama department of Catholic University.

Surely Mr. Coe is aware that if it were not for the distinguished productions of oustanding plays, both classical and modern, that Father Hartke and his associates have given Washington these many years now, dwellers in this community would have access to few dramatic presentations here comparable to professional theater.

Many of us who devoted years to theater-going in New York and elsewhere have seen this production and delighted in its loveliness, excellent artistry and authenticity. C. B. ROSE.

Medical Index

N. S. Haseltine's article in your issue of February 5, in which the suggestion is made that the Surgeon General of the Army may recommend suspension of publication of the world famous Index Catalogue of the Surgeon General's Library, strikes alarm in the minds of physicians. It prompts a vigorous protest from me, in which I am sure all medical men interested in the promulgation of up-to-the-minute news of medical research and observation will join.

Mr. Haseltine refers to a "backlog" of more than 1,750,000 as yet unpublished entries contained in the index cards of current medical journal literature now available at the library. The use of the word "backlog" is somewhat unfortunate as it may give the impression that once the material, which is the source of the Index Catalogue contents, is published, the catalogue may as well die.

On the contrary, the card index grows at the rate of about 1000 new entries daily, and hence is not a static, dead thing like a backlog. The current journal literature is more like the egg production industry, each egg the possible source of new life in medicine. To discontinue the Index Catalogue would lead to the suspension of the current card index on which the catalogue itself is based, and would be like disrupting all the channels of distribution and sale of eggs once the backlog of accumulated eggs had been exhausted.

Catching Spies

With regard to espionage conducted in this country, it seems there must be a more effective method of combating it. One method that comes to mind is that of offering a large reward to anyone furnishing information on enemy agents that are subsequently convicted of espionage or any treasonable conduct. The reward would be a standing offer by the United States Government and the amount would be around one million dollars.

Most of the people engaged in the spy racket are doing so for a price. Along the chain of accomplices is one link that would dissolve under the promise of one million dollars. Besides being more effective this proposal would be more economical than the present method of attempting to monitor all suspicious characters.

Astronomy Interest

As I take great pride in what I consider one of America's best papers, I should like to suggest that you make it even more comprehensive by printing a monthly article on the skies and the stars. This would please not only those who observe the heavens in a desultory way, but stimulate interest in astronomy in general and thus open new avenues to the uninitiated among the wonderful maze of the constellations and the course of our planets. Besides, stars are useful, inasmuch as they make man a little wiser and a little humbler; and he badly needs both.

Opposition To Acheson

By Marquis Childs

Politics And Idealism

THERE WAS never any serious possibility that the noisy opposition would succeed in forcing Secretary of State Dean Acheson out of office. The noise will continue. It is likely to grow louder, the chorus swollen by those who are honestly and desperately looking for some way out of the trap that seems about to close in on us all.

It is important to distinguish between the various voices in this chorus. Among them are extremists who would use any means to undermine the Administration's foreign policy.

Acheson is a convenient whipping boy. His remarks on Alger Hiss were a new stick to grab hold of. Those remarks, uttered in compassion and humility in the face of tragedy, were naturally distorted by those who wanted to drive out the Secretary.

But other voices are audible. They are those of sincere and deeply troubled Americans who feel that something more must be done than is apparently being done to avert what appears to be a race for total disaster. It is easy to dismiss them as "woolly minded," but this kind of woolly-mindedness, if that is what it is to be called, has long been an American characteristic.

Another word for it is idealism. It is a component of the innumerable American societies for peace and good will and social betterment. This quality has sent American missionaries around the world. It has been behind the great private philanthropies performed by Americans in every corner of the globe.

AN AMERICAN Secretary of State must take account of this strain of character. To ignore it is to risk losing touch with elements essential to the support of policy.

But a footnote should be added. Too often in a time such as the present the Secretary of State is expected to perform a miracle. He must produce something, somehow, that will be "the answer."

The idealist in America has too frequently in the past been eager to accept the beguiling shadow of a Kellogg Peace Pact for the substance of reality. The Kellogg Pact was a beautiful but meaningless gesture embraced by millions of the wishfully hopeful. The idealist seizes on the magic of words.

What Acheson with his clear, precise intellect realizes above everything else is that there is no miracle that can resolve the present divisions of the world. In effect, that is what he was saying in his long press conference statement.

One important thing to remember is that Acheson is the third man to serve as Secretary of State since July of 1945, when the late Edward Stettinius resigned. That has meant three interruptions to the course of American foreign policy in a period of less than five years.

JAMES F. BYRNES served for little more than a year and a half, from July of 1945 to January 26, 1947. He was succeeded by Gen. George C. Marshall, who first made known his intention of resigning in December of 1948 and a little later was succeeded by Acheson.

Neither Byrnes nor Marshall performed miracles. They were both under the same kind of pressures that Acheson now is under in greatly accentuated fashion. They both had come to feel, before their respective resignations, a sense of something like hopelessness in the office from which so very much was expected. I believe it is true to say that they both put down the burden with a great sense of relief.

Another break in the continuity of foreign policy now would work serious harm. Acheson is not the indispensable man. But it would be difficult to find another Secretary with his knowledge, skill and experience who would be acceptable both to President Truman and the Senate. And, it should be added, someone with those qualifications who would be willing at this point to take the job.

The perfect Secretary of State may exist in a utopia where his services would be confined to harmonizing the harmonious. But perfection for these times implies the capacity to pass miracles, and it is simply not in the cards for one human being.

I wish that in some way without violating his basic concept of policy with respect to the Soviet Union Secretary Acheson could respond to the wishes and hopes of so many Americans who feel already half way down the road of despair. But we must not expect him to do the impossible and by a magic of words resolve the deep-seated ills of our time.

Today and Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

Three Bad Weeks

IF OUR object is to make everything as easy as we can for Moscow and as difficult as possible for ourselves, then we have managed one way and another to do a lot during the past three weeks. But if we are still trying to win the cold war, we have hurt our own cause very seriously indeed in Asia and in Europe.

Lippmann

THE REPUBLICAN minority in Congress which adheres to Chiang, unable to impose its own policy on the Administration, has nevertheless succeeded in impairing, perhaps ruining, the chances of any other policy. It cannot be their intention to hamstring the United States Government. But that is precisely what they are doing.

The record shows that when they were overruled by the President on the issue of intervention in Formosa, they did not accept the decision but instead took steps to nullify it. Their method was to vote against economic aid to Korea in the House in order to logroll the Administration into giving additional support to Chiang in Formosa. Their plan was to compel the Administration to keep itself tied to Chiang or to sacrifice the American position in Korea.

The President and Secretary Acheson chose to appease them and agreed to buy aid to Korea with aid to Chiang. This act of appeasement was followed promptly by Chiang's use of American planes to bomb Shanghai and by his threat to bomb Peiping. When we protested against our being involved against our will in this massacre of Chinese civilians, Chiang rejected our protests haughtily. He felt able to defy the American Government and to bomb the American power plant in Shanghai, and the installations of the Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., and to kill or maim a thousand Chinese civilians. Why? Because he interpreted the actions in Congress as meaning that he had such strong supporters in Congress that he could thumb his nose at the President of the United States.

AND WHAT is Chiang's purpose in these raids? They have no conceivable military value in his war with the Chinese Communists. It is an insult to anyone's intelligence to argue that Chiang from Formosa with his tiny air force can defeat, or seriously injure, the Red regime of the Chinese mainland.

Chiang's purpose in these raids is not to fight his war but to keep us entangled so that his war may become our war. By using American planes and American bombs against defenseless Chinese civilians he means to provoke the Chinese into reprisals against Americans and westerners generally. Chiang's object is to embroil us in a Chinese war. For he thinks that then he would get unlimited money and arms.

NOTHING could suit the Kremlin better. Their object is to force Red China into the Soviet orbit and to isolate it from the United States. That is easy to do if America is represented in China only by Chiang's American airplanes killing Chinese civilians. The Russians have nothing to fear from Chiang or from any military help that Senator Knowland or Representative John Davis Lodge could or would get Congress to give to Chiang. But the Russians have everything to gain by keeping us permanently entangled with Chiang and forever embroiled and hated in China.

That is their very best insurance against any form of Titoism in China. It is their very best way of diverting the attention of the Chinese from the north, where Chinese and Russian interests conflict, to the south. For if China can be provoked into becoming engaged in a struggle for Indo-China and Thailand and Burma, what will be the result?

THE STRUGGLE will surely be indecisive. But it will also be exhausting both to the Chinese and to the Western nations involved. The Chinese will be too weak to win in the south against the British, the French and the Americans. They will be too weak to resist the Russians in the north. On the other hand, the French will not be strong enough to reconquer Indo-China—they already have their whole professional army engaged and have denuded themselves of effective military power in Europe. But with American help the French will be strong enough to remain pinned down in a cruel and indecisive little war.

What could suit the Russians better than to have the only land army in western Europe fighting guerillas in Indo-China? If there is a cheaper and easier way to nullify the military aid program of the Atlantic Pact, I do not know what it is.

Chiang's Republican friends in Congress are assuming an awful responsibility.

AND simultaneously we have gravely injured our position in Europe by the thoughtless frenzy of our dealings with the hydrogen bomb. The net result of the announcements, congressional hearings, and press conferences on that subject has been to inform our allies that we do not know how they can be defended because we are afraid we cannot even defend ourselves. That, I repeat, is the net result, the practical, human consequence of the unmanly, demoralizing, and most un-American yielding to panic at the sudden and belated discovery that we do not have undisputed military superiority.

This cannot go on, or we shall destroy our influence in Asia and in Europe, and we shall worry and frighten ourselves into a humiliating and dangerous isolation. We have before us the inordinately difficult task of reorienting our foreign policy, which has been overextended and miscalculated, to what Mr. Acheson calls the existing situation of fact.

It cannot be done while we are frightened out of our wits, and so divided among ourselves by partisan hatreds and personal suspicions that we think only with our viscera and not with our minds. We shall have to become sane again if we are to be safe, and we shall have to rally to some standard and close our ranks.

That standard cannot be raised by the minority members of a minority party. It will have to be raised by the President of the United States.

Teachers Disagree About Need Of Social Security Benefits

By the United Press

Teachers disagreed yesterday on whether they should be brought under the Government's Social Security umbrella.

It was urged by some as a "floor of protection." Others opposed it as a "threat" to their own retirement systems.

The arguments were outlined before the Senate Finance Committee, which is studying a House-approved bill to enlarge the coverage and the benefits of the Government's old age and survivors' insurance program.

M. C. Raver of the Maryland State Teachers Association said his group wants "no part" of the Government program. He said it would make present teacher retirement systems "uncertain."

"Nothing could be more damaging to public employe and teacher morale," he said.

Fennessey Canty of the Connecticut Education Association said his group does not favor the Federal program because "we teachers in Connecticut have a good retirement system."

Dorothy Shanley Lewis of the Connecticut Teachers' Retirement Board said that to include teachers in the Federal program is "impractical and fraught with danger."

Dr. William C. Greenough of the Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association of America, said he believes private and Federal insurance can work together.

He said Federal benefits could provide a "subsistence level" and that private retirement systems could offer additional benefits. Neither system, he emphasized, should try to do the whole job.

Herman A. Gray of the American Council on Education urged that the Federal system "on a mandatory basis" should be extended to privately controlled charitable, educational, scientific and religious organizations. All now are exempt.

Gray said it would not affect their tax-exempt status because the social security deducations are not a tax but are, instead, a part of each worker's pay.

Hearing Asked on Health Bill

M. Nixon (Calif.), Thurston B. Morton (Ky.) and Robert Hale (Me.).

Closely paralleling the Ives-Flanders bill introduced in the Senate, their House substitute for the Administration's measure is based largely upon voluntary health plans throughout the Nation, with individuals paying a percentage of the cost, and the State and Federal Governments making up the difference.

In bringing the Administration's "sincerity" into question, they followed a new tack on Fair Deal measures being taken by old-line party leaders as well as the GOP's so-called "Progressives."

Republicans have been charging as a party that the Administration is more interested in taking health insurance, FEPC, Taft-Hartley repeal and other key points into the campaign than in passing corrective legislation.

A GOP effort to "smoke out" the Administration on the civil rights issue is slated to start up in the Senate when Congress gets down to a normal schedule next week.

Senate Republican Leader Kenneth S. Wherry (Nebr.) charged that Senate Administration leaders are more anxious to show the so-called Wherry cloture rule (requiring 64 Senate votes to shut off debate) won't work on the FEPC bill than to pass a civil rights program.

"Now we are told the Senate won't act until the House does," said Wherry. "As a minority, we intend to take advantage of every opportunity to get one of those bills (antilynching, antipolltax or FEPC) before the Senate."

In the House, meantime, two Republicans introduced resolutions calling for a change in House rules to deprive Speaker Rayburn of any discretion as to whom he shall recognize when committee chairmen try to call up bills on "discharge days."

The resolutions, introduced by Representatives Kenneth B. Keatin (R., N. Y.) and John W. Heselton (R., Mass) would require the Speaker to recognize chairmen in the order in which they filed "discharge" rules.

If the change were now in effect, Speaker Rayburn would have to recognize House Labor Chairman John Lesinski (D., Mich.) to call up the FEPC bill on the next discharge day.

The House "Young Turk" Republican demand for hearings on their health insurance bill brought a quick rejoiner from Representative Priest.

Priest said he intends to schedule "general hearings' on health insurance "in about a month," after other pending health bills are cleared.

He said not a Republican on the committee objected to that arrangement when the schedule was made "and in all ways we've played down politics on our subcommittee."

Priest said he hadn't yet received the letter released by the six Republicans, "but if they will check with others on their side of the asile I am convinced they will find that a majority of House Republicans are opposed to any hearings on this subject."

The six authors of the substitute GOP health bill said their measure "involves neither socialized medicine nor medicine for indigents only.

"It recognizes that the problem of medical care for the people is urgent and that the Government should participate in its solution," they said.

Their bill would make use of present voluntary health units like the Blue Cross and Blue Shield and encourage organization of hundreds of new voluntary health plans.

Individuals with incomes up to $5000 would pay 3 percent of their earnings for the service. The Federal and State governments would pay any difference between the cost of the service and the amount of contributions.

Clark Denies Nourse Charge Of Truman's Lack of Interest

Dr. John D. Clark, of President Truman's Council of Economic Advisers, yesterday accused former council chairman Dr. Edwin G. Nourse of giving a wrong idea of President Truman's relations with the group.

Clark told a Senate Judiciary subcommittee studying proposed monopoly law revisions that "no President will ever give" more intense attention to council reports than Mr. Truman does.

He added that he and Acting Chairman Dr. Leon Keyserling did not strive to push economic theories in which they were interested personally.

Senator Forrest C. Donnell (R., Mo.), drew the retorts from Clark when he read a recent magazine article written by Nourse, who resigned last November 1.

Clark said Nourse's description of "the attitude of the President is so erroneous that I want to tell you of my personal experience."

He told of one 11-hour session with the White House staff on the 1950 economic report. Mr. Truman, he added, later spent more than two hours going over this study "word by word" with the council.

After his exchange with Donnell, Clark turned his attention to the bill before the subcommittee which would outlaw purchase of a company's assets by another firm when the sale would abolish competition.

He said the measure would close a "glaring loophole" in antitrust laws and that objections to it are greatly "overdrawn."

In response to a question, Clark said he did not consider the recent merger of the New York Sun and World-Telegram was a "planned attempt to restrict competition."

He discounted the notion that high labor costs had forced the sale of the Sun or 33 other newspapers which went out of existence last year. He blamed their demise on "inefficient management."

When Donnell asked him why he thought this was the reason, Clark replied:

"Because that's the way business is run."

Inefficient operators, he said, are constantly being run out of business by more efficient competitors.

NLRB Power Reaffirmed in 'Unfair' Cases

The Supreme Court yesterday again affirmed the National Labor Relations Board's authority to act on unfair labor practice charges when Federal and State labor laws are the same.

The court acted by issuing a brief order reversing the Wisconsin State Supreme Court in a case involving the Plankington Packing Co., a Milwaukee subsidiary of Swift & Co. and the CIO United Packing House Workers.

Yesterday's high court order puts the next move up to the NLRB. There were no indications when — or whether — the board might act.

The court handed down only one formal opinion at yesterday's session. In a ruling delivered by Justice Burton, the court upheld the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in reversing a Court of Claims ruling in a capital gains tax case involving a charitable trust. Justices Black and Jackson dissented and Justice Douglas took no part in the case.

Insurance Tax 'Soaks Savers,' Hearing Told

By the United Press

Life insurance executives balked yesterday at the Administration's plan for putting a tax on their earnings as a scheme to "soak the savers for the benefits of the spenders."

They agreed to a one-year extension of a stop-gap bill to collect 90 million dollars on their profits of 1947, 1948 and 1948. The extension would produce an estimated 50 million dollars more.

The insurance executive testified before the House Ways and Means Committee which is considering a "single package" tax revision bill. Claris Adams, president of the Ohio State Life Insurance Co., Columbus, Ohio, said taxes on insurance companies "will come out of the hard-earned savings of the policyholders."

Horace R. Bassford, vice president of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., New York, compared it with levying a tax on "deposits paid in through a bank window."

The insurance firms paid no taxes on their 1947-49 earnings because of a "quirk" in the present law.

The link that had to come

The two main roads to the solution of life's problems have been the way of Science and the way of Religion.

Though seeking the same answer, they have seemed to be divergent, to demand a choice of one at the expense of the other.

The rational thinker felt religion was lacking in logic and unsupported by proof of its claims.

The religious thinker felt science ignored his deep conviction that there was a primal cause, Mind or intelligence, which he reverently called God.

Today these two paths converge on common ground. Both science and religion can now agree. For through the Christian Science textbook the actual Science of Christianity has been revealed.

SCIENCE and HEALTH

In the way of both reason and revelation—in a way that can be proved step by step, this great book shows the solution to life's problems of health, harmony, supply or security, whatever they may be.

Caps Make It Definite, They'll Operate Next Year

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

THE KIKI CUYLER obituaries were scanty, I'd say, stacked against the feats of the man who was scintillating for most of 15 seasons in the National League and racking up a lifetime batting figure of .321. When a heart attack struck Cuyler down at the age of 50 the other day, one of the great career outfielders passed on.

He was the dream outfielder for the Pirates and the Cubs back in the mid-and-late '20s, this lad who came out of Bay City, Mich., in 1920, to wind up with four National League pennant winners at Pittsburgh and Chicago. Cuyler could hit, he could run and he could throw with skills that seldom came wrapped in the same human package.

POVICH

An old baseball prospector named Cap Mains, who worked over the Michigan territory for a couple of major league clubs, uncovered young Cuyler in the Michigan-Ontario League, and engineered his sale to the Pirates. If Mains was smitten by Cuyler's speed, among his other assets, then no wonder: He saw Cuyler, playing center field one day, actually catch a foul fly.

That Cuyler was no flash in the pan was evident a couple of seasons later when he stole 68 bases for Nashville in the Southern. The Pirates, taking note also of his .340 batting average, called him to the home office.

KIKI, AS I was saying, was with four pennant winners, but the paradox is that he was probably most famed for the World Series in which he didn't play. That was in 1927 when Pirate Manager Donie Bush stubbornly kept the great Cuyler in his doghouse and out of the lineup while the Yankees were sweeping to a four-straight victory in the series.

Bush suddenly upped and benched Cuyler on August 16 of that season, never let him figure in another game, except as a pinch-hitter. The exact base of their differences is vague, but it is known that Bush lost patience with Cuyler's reluctance to bat second. A third-place hitter most of his career, Cuyler admitted his supersitions and declared the second spot was a mental hazard. Bush showed him who was running the club.

Pittsburgh fans set up a fearful fuss at Bush's refusal to use Cuyler even as a pinch-hitter during the series. "We want Cuyler," they screamed with each successive defeat by the Yanks. Owner Barney Dreyfuss supported Bush, even to the extent of approving the sale of Cuyler to the Cubs at the end of the 1927 season.

WITH THE CUBS, Cuyler pounded out batting averages of .360, and .355 and .330 in three successive years to cement his standing as one of the good ones. He was a power hitter, too, averaging 15 homers in those seasons, and helped take the Cubs into the pennant in 1929-32.

And each year he used to win the "prize waltzes" in the Cubs' spring training camp, where the Catalina Island merchants posted trophies for the most graceful of the athletes. It was never an upset when Cuyler and his fair partners danced off with the trophies. In his every action on the ball field, whether it was swinging his bat, flashing around the bases or drifting far back for an outfield fly, he bespoke grace.

Organized baseball might never have heard of Cuyler, though, were it not for the brief business depression early in 1920. He was laboring in a factory manufacturing automobile tops—the eight-mantops of that era—when the plant had to close down. Desperate to earn a living, Cuyler tried out for the Bay City ball team as a pitcher and made it—as an outfielder.

THE PASSING of Cuyler can jog the memory of Washington fans, circa 1925, and it is hardly a joyful one. Kiki was the villain of the piece in the final game of that World Series between the Nats and the Pirates wherein Walter Johnson was clubbed for 15 hits. Cuyler made the last one, a two-bagger with the bases full that won the game for the Pirates in the eighth, 9-7.

That was the day Johnson had a 4-0 lead in the first inning, and no game ever seemed more securely won. Twice before in the series Johnson had beaten the Pirates with ease. But now he was pitching under difficulties. Rain was making a bog of the field. The late Ring Lardner described it as "chicken a la king." Johnson was slushing and slipping on the pitchers' mound, and in the eighth they tied the score at 7-7.

The Big Train had two strikes on Cuyler, with two out and the bases still full, when Kiki lashed a line drive into right field. The Nats screamed it was foul, but the most the umpires would admit was that it was close to being foul. Cuyler wound up on second, and the Pirates wound up with the world championship.

Says Tulane Dean

Unchecked Subsidization Will Ruin College Sports

[Editors note: The subsidization of college athletics is a prime topic of debate today. To get an authoritative analysis of this problem, the Associated Press wrote to 26 prominent college presidents. This is the first of a series of stories on their replies.]

New York, Feb. 13 (AP).—Forrest U. Lake, faculty chairman of athletics of Tulane University, declared today he believed "some realistic modification should be made" in the N.C.A.A.'s "sanity code."

Dean Lake made the comment in reply to an Associated Press inquiry on subsidization. He was asked these four questions:

1. Does your university subsidize athletes, and if so, to what extent in what sports?
2. Do your alumni subsidize athletes privately, and if so, is this with or without the knowledge of the university?
3. If subsidization, either open or sub rosa, continues unchecked, what future do you predict for American college sports?
4. Do you subscribe to the N. C. A. A. "sanity code"?

Dean Lake's reply follows:

"Tulane awards only such aids to athletes as are permitted under the National Collegiate Athletic Association code.

"I do not believe that athletes of Tulane are subsidized by alumni.

"From the standpoint of educational practices, I think excessive subsidization is intolerable. Spectator sports of the colleges have acquired the Roman holiday touch already. Unfortunately, the public in general is not concerned with the proper relationship of athletics to education.

"We must recognize that while intercollegiate athletics hold a vital and exciting place in our nation, they do function under the banner of our individual educational institutions. It is trite but true to say that sports have become a dynamic part of our way of life, and that colleges and universities in fostering them have wittingly or unwittingly become engaged in the professional entertainment field because of the emphasis placed by alumni and others on winning teams, which in turn has caused budget officers to accent gate receipts.

"If we do not possess an overall conception of our institution's educational aims; if we do not have a sense of balance compatible to the educational program, then we are actively building an athletic Frankenstein that educators and the thinking public will eventually recognize as an evil force and root out. Educators are asking themselves if many of our institutions have not become "football colleges" instead of places where college football is played.

Quattrocchi Scores KO, But Terps Lose Match

Special to The Washington Post.

East Lansing, Mich., Feb. 13. Maryland's Andy Quattrocchi scored another knockout tonight, but Michigan State's unbeaten Spartans won the boxing match, 5½ to 2½.

It was the third straight triumph for the Spartans and Maryland's first loss in three outings.

Michigan State won the top three weight classes in convincing fashion to break up a match which had been tied up to that point.

Only four of the eight bouts went the scheduled three round distances.

Andy Floored

Quattrocchi, Maryland's talented 130-pounder, scored his TKO the hard way, coming up off the floor himself to stop Johnny Flynn in 1:45 of the first round.

It was Quattrochhi's 17th ko in 21 college fights and his third straight this year. His victory evened the match at 1-1 as Hank Amos, of Michigan State, won a decision over Al Glass at 125 pounds in the curtain raiser.

Jack Tierney put Michigan State back into the lead at 135 pounds by eking out a narrow decision over Maryland's Al Salkowski. The bout was stopped after some lively action in the third round because of a cut over Tierney's eye.

The Don Oliver-Rae Johnston bout at 155 pounds was more of the same type of action with referee Weber scoring the 29 points each for a draw.

Chuck Spieser, the Spartan's Olympic team representative in 1948, won on a technical knockout over Maryland's Bob Smith in the 175-pound test. The referee stepped between the boxers at 1:55 of the second round to save Smith further punishment.

State's Gabby Marek then supplied the final touch with a technical knockout victory over Maryland's George Fuller in one minute flat of the first round. He put Fuller on the mat with a right and when the latter hit the deck again a few seconds later it was the end.

The summaries:

125—Henry Ames (M.S.C.) decisioned Al Glass (30-27).
130—Andy Quattrocchi (Md.) won on a TKO in 1:45 of the first round over John Flynn.
135—Jack Tierney (M.S.C.) decisioned Al Salkowski (20-19) (bout stopped at 55 seconds of third round because of Tierney's cut eye).
145—Paul Kostopulos (Md.) decisioned Pat Dougherty (29-28).
155—Rae Johnston (M.S.C.) drew with Don Oliver (29-29).
165—Jim Gemmell (M.S.C.) decisioned Bob Gregson (30-25).
175—Charles Steiner (M.S.C.) won on a TKO over Bob Smith in 1:55 of the second.

Holy Cross Still No. 1

New York, Feb. 13 (AP).—Although it finds the going tougher each week, unbeaten Holy Cross continued to reign as the Nation's top basketball team in the Associated Press poll today.

Victorious in all 20 games, the Crusaders had all to do to come out ahead of Bradley University (21-3), nosing out the Peoria Braves by 37 points to remain on top for the fifth straight week.

Holy Cross drew 56 first place votes from the 140 ballots cast by sports writers and broadcasters throughout the Nation to only 16 for Bradley. The latter, however, commanded enough second, third and fourth and fifth place votes to give the all-conquering Worcester, Mass., five quite a scare. The point total read Holy Cross 986 to Bradley's 949.

The top teams (first-place votes in parentheses and points on a 10-9-8-7-6-5-4-3-2-1 basis) records including Saturday night's games:

20 Baltimore Businessmen Buy Basketball Bullets

Baltimore, Feb. 13 (AP).—A group of 20 Baltimore businessmen tonight bought the Baltimore Bullets of the National Basketball Association.

The deal was announced shortly before midnight after the new owners had been in conference since 8 p. m. with officials of All Sports, Inc., the former owners.

The sale price was not announced, but reports put the figure at about $30,000.

The sale was announced by Robert C. Embry, president of All Sports, Inc., who also joined the new owners as a charter member.

No organization has been set up officially by the buyers, but a spokesman said Buddy Jeannette will be retained as playing coach and also will serve as general manager.

Embry last week turned down an offer from the same group. "The syndicate has increased its offer," Embry said.

Titone Wins Split Decision Over Osario

Charley Titone, Brooklyn featherweight, had the scare of his life last night at Joe Turner's Arena but managed to weather a storm of punches tossed by Filberto Osario, Puerto Rican, to win a split 10-round decision.

Titone, a 5-1 favorite, won the votes of Judges George Fletcher and Joe Bunsa, while Referee Harry Volkman cast his lot for Osario.

It was Titone's fourth victory in six Arena bouts, and virtually assured him of a match with Jimmy Cooper next May at Griffith Stadium. Titone weighed 125 and Osario 125½.

In preliminaries:

Pat Thomas, 121-pounder, scored a technical knockout over Joe DiMines, 123½, in 1:25 of the fourth round.

Benny Droll, 158, scored a five-round decision over Johnny Pratt, 157. Bobby Rupard, 146, and Bobby Busick, 144, fought a found-round draw. Salty Parker, Baltimore, 145, decisioned Bob Kiser, 146, in a four-rounder; Rufus Berry, 175 upset Johnny Holt, 168½ in a four-rounder.

Titone, lost, won and drew with Jimmy Cooper in his first three local appearances and then beat Little Dynamite and Joe Carabella before last night. The win puts him in line for an outdoor date with Cooper to determine the winner of their private feud.

Double Wing For Snavely?

CHAPEL HILL, N. C., Feb. 13 (AP). — Coach Carl Snavely, one of college football's staunchest supporters of the single wing, is teaching his North Carolina Tar Heels a new formation.

It's an open secret that the current off-season drills have seen the introduction of new bits of hokus pokus.

The Tar Heels reportedly are testing a reasonable facsimile of the Southern Methodist mode of attack — the double wing, or "Y."

The Snavely version sports an unbalanced line, which he has always used. One back lines up on the wing. Two "short backs" are stationed side by side, three yards back of the line. The fourth back is two yards deeper, as in the conventional "short punt" formation. The "short backs" are the main ball handlers. They spin and hand off. There is no man under the center, nor any blocking back.

The formation blasts with big power on inside plays and is theoretically good for passes.

Snavely has come up with three bowl teams in his last five seasons here, sticking close to his single wing despite the snowballing "T."

The District National Guard Armory Board announced renewal of his contract at $10,000 a year.

NCAA Approves Baby-Sitting For Athletes

Chattanooga, Tenn., Feb. 13 (AP).—Coach A. C. (Scrappy) Moore of the University of Chattanooga has come up with a neat three-cornered idea for his football players.

The athletic office now functions as a baby-sitting bureau, too.

This is the coach's way of living up to the NCAA sanity code. The NCAA has approved the project.

The players will be available for assignments any evening, or for day duty on Saturdays and Sundays. No wage figure has been set.

Scrappy figures he will have to exercise his squad on pin ups as well as push ups.

Loyola Beats C. U., 75 to 67

Baltimore, Md., Feb. 13.—Loyola won its tenth straight Mason-Dixon Conference game here tonight, defeating a surprisingly tough Catholic University team, 75-67.

Loyola, already assured of a place in the Conference playoffs, figured to have a soft touch in the Cardinals who had won only four of 12 Conference games, but the visitors put up a strong fight before dropping their ninth game.

Bob Anderson, Loyola's 6-foot-6 center and the Conference's fourth leading scorer, enhanced his average by pouring 35 points through the hoop to lead the Greyhounds.

Jim Losty and Joe Della Ratta, Nos. 8 and 9 among the scorers, paced the Cardinals with 26 and 16 points each. Losty made good on 12 of 13 foul tosses.

Terps Revert To Form, Lose To S. Carolina

Maryland's prize in-and-out basketball team chose to be out last night at College Park.

Fifth-place South Carolina tagged the Terps with a 61-56 Southern Conference loss.

In its last start Maryland stunned Duke by knocking the Blue Devils out of the top spot, 67-57.

For a time last night, Maryland seemed raring to rack up its longest winning streak of the season—two games. At halftime, Flucie Stewart's boys were in front, 29-23.

But South Carolina, still fighting for a playoff spot, came back strong to walk off with the victory. Playing the leading role was Jim Slaughter, 6-foot-9 center, who tallied 26 points to increase his Conference scoring lead.

The win was South Carolina's ninth in 14 Conference starts. Maryland suffered its 11th loss against three victories in the league and has won only four games in 20.

Bob Murray was high for the Terps with 16 and Frank Armsworthy had 11.

In the preliminary, Maryland Frosh made their season record an even .500 by downing Headquarters Marine Corps 61-56.

Don Moran was high for the Terps with 15 and Bill Gainey was high with 24 for the Leathernecks.

Problem Is Money

Walcott 'Tentatively' Cancels Germany Bout With Ten Hoff

Camden, N. J., Feb. 13 (AP).—Jersey Joe Walcott's manager today called off the Camden boxer's fight with Hein Ten Hoff, German heavyweight champion—but he tacked a big "if" on his announcement.

The problem is money. Felix Bocchicchio, Walcott's manager, said he received a message from the American agents for the German fight promoters saying it is impossible to meet Walcott's financial demands.

Bocchicchio said he is wiring back that the fight is off unless the bout is arranged "on the original terms we agreed on."

The fight was arranged for May 7 at Esslingen, Germany. Walcott, 36-year-old heavyweight who only last week defeated young Harold Johnson, was guaranteed 40 percent of the gross receipts with a minimum guarantee of $7500.

He also was to get $2500 for transportation (for a party of five) and $3500 for training and living expenses.

Club Won't Fold Despite Being in Red, Foster Says

By Jack Walsh
Post Reporter

The Caps definitely will be doing business at the same old Uline Arena stand next season.

That was the word yesterday from Robert U. (for Uline) Foster, youthful general manager.

According to Foster, Owner Migiel J. Uline, his grandfather, gave him that assurance in a telephone conversation from Florida where he's wintering.

Perturbed by rumors that the local pro basketball team planned to fold, Foster said he wanted to let Washington fans know that the Caps are here to stay.

The season hasn't been an artistic success for last year's BAA runnersup. Recently they broke a five-game losing streak but still are three games below .500, 24-27.

Foster admits it hasn't been financially successful, either. "However," he said, "we're just below the breaking even point. We certainly haven't approached any danger mark."

Foster revealed that the average attendance for 25 home games has been 2200. It has provided an average net gate of approximately $3700. With only the home team sharing in NBA gate receipts, it means the Caps have taken in, after taxes, about $92,000.

Biggest expense is the salary item for 11 ballplayers. The Caps' payroll runs close to $77,000. Road expenses figure to take all of the remainder, plus more.

Have Never Made Money

Foster admitted that the Caps never have made money in their four-year history. "We're going to keep trying, though," he added: "After all, what else can we do?" he asked. "Pro basketball provides us with a 34-night show. What else can we put in?"

Foster pointed out that the Arena recently has started a long-range program to stir up basketball interest here. The 29-year-old executive has worked hard to sell the local high schools and colleges on the advantages of playing at Uline. He expects to have them next season.

He's willing to let them play practically for cost in an effort to make Uline the basketball center and, figures the Caps will benefit, eventually.

Foster admits that the unwieldy 17-club NBA is one of his big problems at the gate.

"Teams like Sheboygan, Anderson, Waterloo and so on are good teams, but they have no gate appeal here," he said. "Conversely, when Washington, Philadelphia or New York play out there, they are big attractions."

Taking most of the heat for the Caps' showing is Player-Coach Bob Feerick, but Foster said, "I'm satisfied with everything but the fact we haven't won enough games. There are many reasons and I'm not blaming Feerick. As far as I know, Bob will be our coach next year."

Feerick himself said, "There's nothing wrong with us a few victories won't cure. People have short memories. We've had a lot of injuries this season and they've hurt. Our boys have won a lot of games in the past and they'll win them again."

Although he's been mentioned as a possible choice for the Santa Clara coaching job, Feerick said yesterday that he wants to remain with the Caps.

"There's not enough money at Santa Clara," he said candidly, "and I don't think I want to quit here now. My bad leg is just about better and I'm sure I can play as well as I ever have."

Feerick said he's done some extensive scouting and correspondence in an effort to bolster the team next year. "I'll admit we need a little youth," he explained, "I'd say two or three outstanding college players. We'll make every effort to get them."

With territorial rights on local college players, Feerick revealed that he'd like to sign Georgetown's Tommy O'Keefe and, perhaps, GW's Art Cerra.

Uncle Sam Goes Into Race Business

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

UNCLE SAM is in the horse racing business.

Now, don't get be wrong, he's not making book. Furthermore, he's not buying up losing mutuel tickets at parity and selling them back to the buyers as waste cardboard.

Haight

Old Uncle Sam hasn't gotten out a tout sheet; taken over the restroom concessions or found a new way to get the service out of Hialeah. No siree!

But he's right up to his whiskers in the game, actually acting as a horse owner and of course paying the feed bills on his equine charges.

Uncle's going to be watching with keen interest, too. He's going to stick his fingers in the pot if the horses win. Who knows? He might even balance the budget.

It started when George M. Crump of Richmond, Va., got into a recent financial wrangle with the Government over income tax payments and Uncle slapped an attachment on his stable of horses.

Receiving no instructions to race the thoroughbreds, Trainer Merritt Buxton shipped them to Gulfstream Park in Florida, hoping to get them in action at the meeting opening March 4.

AS TRAINING AND FEED BILLS mounted on the inactive runners, Buxton began to worry and finally laid the problem before the Internal Revenue Department.

There was an official huddle and a decision that the United States would assume all training, fee and veterinary expenses, pending the outcome of litigation, and Buxton henceforth would report directly to Washington.

Thus 140 million Americans are part owners in the racing stable. This makes every man, woman and child in the country eligible to apply for an owner's badge at any track where the horses perform.

The man on the spot is Buxton. If a horse runs a bad race—why there might be a Congressional investigation.

THEN AGAIN, if Buxton can win the Gulfstream Park Handicap he will help lift the tax burden off the shoulders of the Nation's taxpayers.

Uncle Sam probably will be willing to break even. Perhaps it will be best that he doesn't make a big hit.

Suppose the stable showed a profit. The next move would be to buy other horses and parlay the winnings. Wouldn't be long until Calumet would be going out of business and the Congressional Record would be carrying past performances.

The "old man with the whiskers" had better watch out. The horses might make him say, "Uncle."

Eastern High Has It Easy With Stuyvesant, 96-28

Bill Bennings . . .

Dear Folks: Charles Town has revised its racing dates. The first session of 18 days goes as previously scheduled, starting on March 4. The track will be closed while Laurel gets in its spring session, starting March 25, but will reopen April 8 to oppose Havre de Grace for 18 days. The next meeting calls for 15 days beginning on July 1 with the final five programs to be under the auspicies of the Charles Town Horse Show Association. The oval will have its December session as usual. Secretary Leeds Riely called to say Charles Town's stables are filled now. "Horses have been working out every day since we closed in December. As far as thoroughbreds are concerned, we could open tomorrow," he said.—BILL.

Terps Meet Virginia at College Park

Maryland University plays its second game in two days in the only game involving a local team tonight when the University of Virginia Cavaliers invade College Park.

In the first game between the two teams, played at Charlottesville, Virginia dumped the Terps 66-56, in spite of a 25-point performance by Lee Brawley, Maryland's sophomore sensation.

Coach Flucie Stewart's lads will be hoping to spring another upset as they did against Duke last week. Duke's Blue Devils had trounced the Terps at Durham and came to Maryland expecting a soft touch but Maryland got tough and knocked off the Blue Devils, dropping them from second place in the Southern Conference

Virginia has in Joe Noertker, one of the top scorers in the South. Noertker scored 23 points in the first Maryland-Virginia game and if he can repeat his performance it will be rough on the Terps.

A. U. Freshmen Beat Hagerstown

The American University Frosh romped to their sixteenth win in 20 starts last night, defeating Hagerstown Junior College, 65-30, at A. U.

Ed Freidlander, Bob Jones and Ken Kidwell all hit double figures for American with 11, 10 and 10. Jack Wolford was high for Hagerstown with 15.

Paraplegics Here on Tour

Eleven wheelchair basketball players from the Veterans Hospital at Van Nuys, Calif., lunched in the Capitol yesterday.

They are on their third annual tour seeking to regain the National Paraplegic Basketball Championship they won in 1948.

So far, they are undefeated in seven games against other paraplegic teams and able-bodied teams using wheelchairs. They played Veterans Hospital in Richmond, Va., lastnight and in Memphis, Tenn., Thursday.

Caps to Visit Walter Reed Hospital

Dip Netting Banned In Allegany County

By Ralph Murdock

A REGULATION adopted by the Game and Inland Fishing Commission of Maryland has been approved by the Attorney General of Maryland which prohibits dip-netting in the Potomac River, Allegany County only. The new law went into effect on February 1, 1950. It reads: "Any person convicted of using dip nets in the tributaries of the Potomac River in Allegany County shall be fined not less than $10 nor more than $50, and may be sentenced to 30 days in jail, either or both, in the discretion of the Court or Justice of the Peace before whom said person shall be tried. And, in addition to said fine shall be fined $5 for each and every fish killed in violation of the above regulation."

Murdock

The Maryland Commission has ordered 11,925 cottontail rabbits for the purpose of restocking fields in Maryland where the population has been lowered by hunting. The rabbits are live trapped in Missouri and are shipped by trucks in throw-away crates containing six rabits in each. Game wardens take charge of all distributions and releases.

THE COTTONTAIL is the most important game mammal in American field hunting. The little brown bunny provides hunting close to home, invaluable training for the boy with his first scattergun and plenty of fun for the grownups. The little fellow is hardy and prolific and holds his own where other small game falls back under the increased hunting pressure.

The House Subcommittee on Conservation of Wildlife conducted a hearing recently on Congressman Christian A. Herter's Bill, H. R. 986, which authorizes the Fish and Wildlife Service to undertake a continuing study of fish of particular interest to sport anglers along the Atlantic Coast in cooperation with the States included in the Atlantic States Marine Fisheries Commission.

The purpose is to determine what measures, if any, should be undertaken to increase the abundance of such sport fish as the tuna, white merlin, sailfish, channel bass and others, and to provide for the maximum production and utilization of such fish consistent with the maintenance of an adequate brood supply.

It was pointed out that in the State of Florida alone, the Florida Wildlife Federation estimated that salt water fishing is worth 625 million dollars to the State during the course of a single year. Henry Lyman, editor of the Saltwater Sportsman Magazine, said that during a single month on the island of Martha's Vineyard off the coast of Massachusetts, when a striped bass fishing derby was being conducted, sportsmen brought to and left on the island a quarter of a million dollars over and above the regular island income for that month.

SALT WATER sport fishing has increased by leaps and bounds, not only on the Atlantic Coast, but along the Gulf and the Pacific Coast. On a Saturday afternoon in Chesapeake Bay in the Holland Point area we counted 134 fishing boats within a 3-mile radius.

Some of the authorities who testified before the committee were David H. Wallace, chairman of the Maryland Commission of Tidewater Fisheries; Brig. Gen. Thomas S. Arms, U.S.A., Ret., of the Talbot County Chapter of the Isaac Walton League; Carl D. Shoemaker of the National Wildlife Federation; Don Chaney, legal adviser to the Fish and Wildlife Service; and Mike Hudoba, secretary of the Outdoor Writers Association.

Austrian Girl Wins Ski Title

Aspen, Colo., Feb. 13 (AP).—Dagmar Rom, 21-year-old co-ed at the University of Innsbruck, shot down a three-quarter-mile, icy corkscrew today in 1:29.6 to win the women's world giant slalom ski crown for Austria.

Five of her teammates grabbed berths among the next six finishers as the red-sweatered Austrians dominated the opening event of the Alpine phase in the world ski meet.

Trude Beiser-Jochum, a mother only three and a half months ago, was two tenths of a second behind her co-ed teammate. A poor start probably cost her the title.

Other Austrians among the first seven were Erika Mahringer, Olympic slalom champion, who took fourth here, Annalies Schuh-Proxauf, fifth, Lidia Gstrein, sixth, and Resi Hammerer, who was seventh.

Lucienenne Schmith-Couttet of France was the only skier to break the Austrian stranglehold on the top places. She was third, four tenths of a second behind Miss Rom.

Katy Rodolph, 19-year-old lifeguard at Hayden, Colo., was the speediest American, despite a stumble as she made the jump across a road some 300 yards from the finish. She was timed in 1:33.4 for eighth place.

How to Raise More Spuds Told by U. S.

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

While one agency of the Agriculture Department, the Commodity Credit Corporation, is wrestling with millions of bushels of surplus spuds, another is telling potato growers how to grow more.

The March issue of Soil Conservation, put out by the Soil Conservation Service, devotes its front page to a picture of how to raise more potatoes.

Inside it tells how Marvin Beakley, a Camden County, N. J. grower, increased his crops by contour planting and irrigation.

A proposal that the United States "give away the food that we can't eat and can't sell, and give it quickly and generously," was made by a group of Friends yesterday.

Fifty farmers have met here for two weeks under the sponsorship of the American Friends Service Committee and the Friends' Committee on National Legislation. They have devoted their time to the food problem here and abroad.

Millions Undernourished

"Millions in many countries, including our own, are miserably undernourished while surplus farm products rot in storage," their report says.

"We believe the program the United States should now be adopting is something like that proposed by Senator McMahon, to put our best brains, best energy, best personnel and largest appropriations into an effort to help every part of the world utilize its own resources.

"We believe we must drastically curtail our budgeting for war, and spend some real money on peace."

The action by the Friends was one of several attempts yesterday to solve the surplus food problem.

Brannan Plan for Spuds

1. Senator Elmer Thomas (D., Okla.) announced he will seek a trial of the Brannan Plan for next year's potato crop. He would limit supports to 75 percent of parity until strict limitations are put on potato production.

2. The House Agriculture Committee won't get to its study of the potato problem until next week. Other surplus commodities are taking up this week. Today it will consider wheat surpluses, Wednesday cotton, Thursday rice and Friday and Saturday cotton again.

3. A Congressional opponent of the Brannan plan was quoted by the Associated Press that critics of that proposal are considering applying it to potatoes. "It probably will backfire and cost about 400 million dollars this year," he remarked, the A. P. said. "That ought to blow the Brannan plan to pieces forever."

Grain Men Complain of CCC

Meanwhile the Senate Agriculture Committee heard Midwestern grain men complain about how the Commodity Credit Corporation is handling surplus purchases. Grain commission men, spurred by Senator Hubert H. Humphrey (D., Minn.), urged that CCC be ordered to spend more money and buy grain through established commercial agencies.

They declared that CCC is violating the law by not using commercial trade channels. They also complained that CCC is slow and inaccurate in its dealings.

The testimony was given in connection with a request by CCC for two billion dollars more funds to carry out the price support program.

But Bigelow is glad to get it. "It will pay off the debts of my two cabs," he said. "That will make things nice."

Bigelow, who lives with his wife Dorothy and 2-year-old daughter, Lennie, in a Rockville, Md., apartment, started his 1198 days on Corregidor when the stronghold fell to the Japanese.

In 1943 he was taken to Omota to work in a coal mine. It was here his right leg was snapped by a falling rock. When the leg became infected the Japs had an American doctor amputate it.

Although Omota is only 30 miles from Nagasaki, the A-bomb target, Bigelow said he didn't even know when it was dropped. About that time, however, he said prison treatment rapidly improved.

The former Navy veteran was discharged as chief yeoman in February 1947. He met his wife on Christmas Day in 1947 when she came to his office to get a cab.

"Just couldn't seem to find one for her," he grinned, "and first thing you know we were married."

Former prisoners of war, both American and Philippine Island military forces, will receive the payments more speedily, the War Claims Commission said, because of last week's rulings that all German and Japanese prison camps were substandard.

The War Claims Act permits the $1-per-day payment only for days during which POW's did not receive food of quality and quantity established by the Geneva Convention of 1929.

Reserve Officer Volunteers as Leper Worker

LIEUT. (j.g.) G. C. McNEILLY,
. . . Asks island assignment

By the United Press

The Navy yesterday disclosed that a young medical reserve officer, with a wife and two children, has volunteered to take over the care of lepers on remote Tinian Island in the Pacific.

Dr. Gordon C. McNeilly, 30, of Utica, Ill., will return to active Navy duty as a lieutenant junior grade for the assignment, officials said.

He will move his family to the Island about May 1. They will live about 2 miles from the United States Government leprosarium, which now cares for 100 victims of the dread Hansen's disease (leprosy).

McNeilly will relieve Lieut. (j. g.) Jack W. Miller of Santa Rosa, Calif., who has been medical officer at the institution since it was established in 1948.

Before going to Tinian, McNelly will receive special training at the United States Marine Hospital, Carville, La., and the Hawaiian Territorial Leprosarium on Molokai Island.

New Standard for Schools

2. That Congress continue the ban on recreational training such as dancing, public speaking and flight training.

3. Legislation to reduce the number of overpayments of subsistence allowances and tuition costs. The report said overpayments thus far have amounted to some $200,000,000 of which $160,000,000 has been recovered.

4. Legislation specifying that veterans must put in at least 36 hours a week at a trade school.

5. New and tighter minimum standards for training schools.

Italian Says Soviet Will Free Prisoners

Rome, Feb. 13 (U.P.).—An Italian Foreign Office spokesman today said Russia has agreed to repatriate all remaining Italian prisoners of war shortly. The first group may leave within a few days, he said.

An estimated 80,000 Italians are still missing in Russian territory, according to Italian figures. Until now the Soviets have maintained there were no more Italians in their custody.

Land Administration By Federal Agencies Is Being Studied Again

How best to administer the land activities of the Agriculture and Interior departments is being studied again.

The future of Agriculture's Forest Service and Soil Conservation Service and Interior's Bureau of Land Management and National Park Service are involved in the survey. Officials of the two departments are working with the Budget Bureau on the project.

The President's Advisory Committee on Management Improvement initiated the study. It merely announced:

"In view of the conflicting opinions expressed by members of the Hoover Commission on the best organization for administraton of public lands, a project is being organized to appraise these views and provide recommendations."

The Hoover Commission, it's recalled, was split on both of its Interior and Agriculture recommendations. The majority favored the transfer of Interior's Bureau of Land Management to Agriculture. Several members felt the Forest Service should be switched to Interior.

In the late 1930s another President's committee proposed the transfer of the Forest Service to Interior. This recommendation stirred up a storm of opposition and it was one of the main reasons why the President's reorganization plan was killed at that time. The President and other officials accused the Forest Service of lobbying to kill the plan.

COMMERCE: Wednesday will be the last work day for upward of 100 employes in Commerce's Office of International Trade. Most of the people to be laid off are in Export Control . . . Eighteen Commerce employes will be given gold medals for exceptional service by Secretary Sawyer at a ceremony to be held at 3 p. m. today in the Departmental Auditorium. Ninety-two other employes will get silver medals for their outstanding service.

CIVIL SERVICE NOTES: Its Fair Employment Board will hand down its first decision in a day or so on the Bureau of Engraving and Printing case. Several Negro employes in the bureau charge racial discrimination . . . The commission is about ready to unveil its plan to encourage Federal agencies to promote employes to vacancies. The No. 1 provision—each agency is to have a promotion plan in writing for its employes.

TOP JOBS: Civil Service also has tentatively approved reallocations to the 400 jobs in the three new super grades—GS-16, 17, and 18. The salaries range from $11,200 to $14,000.

MACHINE: The Treasury Department is proud of its mechanization program in the Internal Revenue Bureau and other agencies that has saved millions of dollars. And it hasn't finished the process.

The department has the Bureau of Standards at work on another labor-saving device—an electronic machine to count worn-out paper money and to check imperfect currencies. If the machine proves to be a success, it would result in the abolition of upwards of 200 jobs in the department here.

WOMEN: Their number in Government has declined from a peak of 1,106,000 in July, 1944, to 408,000 as of January 1. They now make up 22 percent of the 1,828,000 Federal workers. Selective Service has the largest percentage of women employes, 78 percent, and Post Office the smallest, 8 percent.

BOOKLET: AFL's American Federation of Government Employes is getting out a question and answer booklet on the new employes compensation law. This law provides generous benefits for employes who are injured or killed on their jobs. I'll be glad to send you a copy if you send me a self-addressed stamped envelope.

JOB NEWS: More than 19,500 persons here will be given the Census clerk and tabulating machine operator exams on February 18 and March 4 . . . A Civil Service register of 1109 eligibles has been set up from the recent test for information specialists. About 1800 failed it . . . Civil Service will announce exams soon for: archives assistant, library assistant, plant mounting assistant, and museum aid at $2450 to $3825 starting salaries. Also, for tobacco inspectors, $2650 to $4600, and medical officers, $5400 to $6400.

Wife Calls Keleher's Love Antics Humiliating

Activity in Blake Apartment Made Him 'Laughing Stock' She Tells Court

By Joseph Paull
Post Reporter

The "lovey-dovey" antics of John B. (Dapper Dan) Keleher made him the "laughing stock" of the Dorchester House here, his estranged wife testified yesterday.

Mrs. Anna T. (Dolly) Keleher, 51, made the statement in explaining to Judge Charles F. McLaughlin of District Court why she kept a close watch on her 68-year-old spouse. What she saw, Mrs. Keleher said, "humiliated" her.

Mrs. Keleher, who charges Keleher makes up to $300,000 a year as a gambler, is seeking a limited divorce on grounds of cruelty. Keleher has countered for an absolute divorce charging desertion.

The wife was on the witness stand most of the day. Once she cried so vigorously that a recess was called.

Saw Him Frequently

Mrs. Keleher said she had often seen Keleher in the Dorchester House apartment of Mrs. Dorothy S. Blake, 46, who Mrs. Keleher contends is the "other woman" in the case.

"People in the apartment house, friends of mine, were talking and there was gossip all over," she testified.

Then it was, Mrs. Keleher said, that she stationed herself almost daily outside the Dorchester, 2480 16th st. nw., to see for herself.

As often as three times a week, Mrs. Keleher said, her husband at around 10 a. m. would come to the window of Mrs. Blake's quarters.

"He did his deep-breathing exercises. He was dressed in his shorts. Once Mrs. Blake came to the window and pulled up the blinds," she testified.

Mrs. Keleher had charged Keleher kept up a long-distance betting business on Mrs. Blake's telephone and presented a hundred or more telephone-call receipts to bolster her argument. Yesterday, she had to explain some telephone calls of her own.

She couldn't remember, she said calling Mrs. Blake's family in Philadelphia, although the receipt listed the call as coming from her Woodley Park Towers apartment.

On March 4, 1948, she said, a friend of Keleher's named 'Funkhouser" came to her apartment and wanted Keleher so she called him at Miami Beach. She testified:

"I told him that Mr. Funkhouser had come over to see me because my husband had been trying to get me on the telephone. My husband was complaining that Pearson, his key man in Mount Rainier, wasn't taking care of Bowie and Plumer and Brown."

Her husband replied that Pearson should "take care of them, and that things often went wrong while he (Keleher) was out of town," she testified.

Identifies Officials

Questioned further, Mrs. Keleher said that the three men named were A. Gwynn Bowie, Prince Georges County State's Attorney, Ralph Brown, county chief of police, and Eugene Plumer, former chief of police in Mount Rainier.

Keleher has denied knowing any of the county officials or having dealings with them.

Mrs. Keleher is getting $100 a week separate maintenance and claims that she is ill, broke, and threatened with eviction.

"If I were to live as Dolly Keane Kelleher, my maiden name, I could get along on $100 a week," she said. "But my husband wanted me to live as Mrs. Jack Keleher and involved me in luxury."

She said that her rent, for a seven-room, two-bath apartment is $162 monthly, that food costs $75 a week for herself, and that transportation, via taxi, costs $55 monthly.

Over the objection of Mrs. Keleher's lawyer, James J. Laughlin, questions were asked by attorney Alvin L. Newmyer in an attempt to show that Mrs. Keleher once posed as a Congressman's wife and told police that a riot was going on in Mrs. Blake's apartment. Newmyer said he would prove his charge during the case, which continues today.

Man Indicted In D. C. Boat Assault Case

A 40-year-old laborer yesterday was indicted by the District grand jury for assaulting a 35-year-old mother aboard her cabin cruiser home.

Indicted on charges of assault with intent to commit rape, assault with a dangerous weapon and housebreaking was Joseph B. Vines, of 435 N St. nw.

The victim was Mrs. Jeannie Williams, who identified Vines as the man who came aboard her boat at the Gregory boatyard, 820 Maine ave. sw., January 26, ordered her to disrobe, then slugged her with a piece of pipe. She grabbed the pipe from him, hit him in the eye with it and he fled, she told the police.

Other Indictments

Vines was arrested two days later by Park Police, who said they saw him tampering with a public telephone. He was also indicted yesterday for the theft of a radio and cigarette lighter January 24 from the boat of Albert C. Leitch, docked at 1300 Maine ave. sw.

Also included in the 50 indictments handed down yesterday by the grand jury were:

An indictment charging James Nelson, 43, of 2350 6th st. nw.; David J. Wilson, 48, 614 2d st. nw., and Albert R. Jackson, 35, of 432 New York ave. nw., with two counts each of housebreaking and larceny. Police said they took $2870 in cash from a filing cabinet in the Rockingham Poultry Co., 480 L st. nw., and $319 in cash from a cabinet in the Federal Beef Co., located next door at 478 L st. nw. on January 15.

Perry W. Holmes, 41, of 4518 Canal rd. nw.; Charles M. Thorne, 24, of 1612 U st. se., and Richard J. Elam, 21, of 1526 Good Hope rd. se., were indicted for housebreaking and larceny. Police said they took a safe containing $1076 from the Stage Coach Restaurant, 1306 Good Hope rd. se., November 27.

Anita V. Miles, 31, of 3330 4th st. se., was indicted for assault on a police officer. Precinct Detective Louise F. Kelley, attached to the Women's Bureau, reported Mrs. Miles struck her in the eye after being placed under arrest for disorderly conduct at Union Station.

Accused of Larceny

An indictment charging larceny of District property was returned against James W. Kinard, 35, of 1654 Rosedale st. ne., a pharmacist at Gallinger Hospital.

Two women and two men were indicted on charges of operating a lottery and possession of numbers slips. They are:

Mrs. Edna R. Curtis, 32, of 321 15th st. se., arrested December 29 in the 1800 block of Gales st. ne.; Mrs. Ella L. Knox, 49, of 309 C st. ne., arrested December 30 at her home; Noble D. Butler, 45, of 1426 N. Capitol st., arrested December 17 at his home, and Frank Harris, 49, of 7 New York ave. nw.

Two women were indicted on charges they performed abortions. They are: Louise E. Jones, 51, of 1440 W st. nw., and Leola M. James, 32, of 1128 G st. ne.

Penal Budget Of $3,560,300 In '51 Asked

District penal institutions now have an average population of 3142 persons per day, and in addition, the District pays the Federal Government for keeping 325 prisoners in institutions elsewhere.

This was revealed yesterday when testimony of Donald Clemmer, director of the Department of Corrections, before a House District subcommittee was made public.

He asked for a 1951 budget appropriation of $3,560,300, compared with a 1949 expenditure of $3,071,530, and an estimated expenditure in the present fiscal year of $3,340,557.

Of the $3,560,300 figure for fiscal 1951, $190,300 is reimbursable for services performed, bringing the actual appropriation or estimate for that year to $3,370,000.

Cost of keeping prisoners in the 1949 fiscal year was $2.70 per person per day, Clemmer testified, but that cost in the present fiscal year is down to $2.49 per prisoner per day. New York City's cost, he testified, is $3.12 per man per day, and in institutions under the Federal Bureau of Prisons it is $3.38 per day.

District Bloodhounds Need New Blood

Bloodhounds at the District's penal institutions at Lorton and Occoquan aren't what they should be, says Donald Clemmer, head of the Department of Corrections. They've all been raised at the institutions and have become inbred.

So Clemmer has asked $500 in the 1951 budget to purchase some new ones, a male from Kentucky and a female from Georgia, or vice versa, to improve the strain. He explained the need when he appeared before a House subcommittee.

The department operates a total of 13 work projects, mostly at institutions at Lorton and Occoquan, Va., Clemmer said, and all of these pay their own way, or made money. He said that the workhouse farm in 1949 produced a total of nearly four million pounds of food, valued at $165,784 and that the quantity for 1950 is estimated at 4,152,800 pounds, valued at $167,753.

Clemmer asked for $15,000 to begin construction of a fence around the reformatory.

Gallinger's X-Ray Needs Revealed

Lack of Facilities Endangers Hospital Standing, Budget Committee Told

Gallinger Municipal Hospital so lacks adequate X-ray facilities it may lose organized medicine's approval of the department, Congress has been told.

Dr. Joseph F. Tazekas, Gallinger chief of staff, disclosd this in testimony before a House Appropriations Subcommittee, the records of which were made public yesterday.

Even now, Dr. Fazekas testified, the hospital X-ray department is operating on a one-year, temporary approval of the Roentgenology Board, American Medical Association, for residency training in the specialty. The action followed board inspection of the Gallinger facility last summer, he said.

Dr. Fazekas made the disclosure in justifying budget requests for $30,000 to purchase X-ray equipment.

Dr. Philip A. E. Stebbing, Gallinger superintendent, told the same congressional body that the hospital needs $25,000 to replace basement floors which become wet and insanitary after every rain.

Because of present inadequacies of X-ray service, Dr. Fazekas reported, patients must sometimes wait three and four weeks for X-rays. The equipment, he said, would be adequate for a 250-bed hospital, but is used for a 1500-bed institution.

He said also that Gallinger patients must often wait from late Friday to Monday for such things as blood tests because the hospital hasn't the personnel to make the tests.

"The situation is horrible," he declared.

Court Profits Cited in Quest For '51 Funds

By Howard L. Dutkin
Post Reporter

The Municipal Court, through fines and forfeitures, is making more than twice the amount of its estimated cost for upkeep for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, it was revealed yesterday in a transcript of House District budget hearings.

The court is seeking $690,200 for expenses for the 1951 fiscal year while reporting an expected earning of $1,388,000.

The $690,200 request represents an increase of $112,692 over the $577,508 estimated cost for the fiscal year ending June 30.

Budgetary increases were also asked by the Juvenile Court and the Municipal Court of Appeals at the hearings conducted before the subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations which concluded hearings January 23.

Although the estimate for fiscal 1950 was only $504,759, the total obligations amounted to $577,508 because of supplemental estimates created by congressional granting of pay increases for District employes.

The Juvenile Court asked $325,300 or $32,300 more than the 1950 estimate of $293,000.

The actual estimate for 1950 was $264,248 but this was raised to a total of $293,000 also because of pay increases granted by Congress.

An increase of $3365 was asked by the Municipal Court of Appeals which seeks $94,800 for the 1951 fiscal year as against an estimated $91,435 for 1949-1950.

Courts Blamed

Kin's Support Of Old People Falls Off

The District Board of Public Welfare reduced the contributions of children for support of aging parents and relatives on public relief after local courts told the board that in some cases the payments were too high.

This was disclosed yesterday as transcripts of recent hearings before the House Subcommittee on District Appropriations were made public.

Welfare Director John W. Tramburg engaged in a lively discussion with Chairman Joe Bates (D., Ky.) and Representative Ralph E. Church (R., Ill.), a committee member, over a request for slightly increased old-age assistance funds and why more elderly persons are on relief rolls locally.

Representative Church attributed overcrowded old-age homes here and elsewhere to a "dying heart throb for the good old mother and father," among the younger people, due, he said, to an over-paternalistic Government offering assistance.

Tramburg revealed local judges have "given us quite a dressing down" for demanding that children contribute too large a portion of their family income for care of their parents in public institutions.

The board subsequently eased up family contributions for old-age assistance, Tramburg explained, and since then the courts have had no complaints, he added.

Bates backed Tramburg to the limit, the testimony shows.

In the current fiscal year the Welfare Board estimates it will be supporting 2712 aged, with the number expected to reach 2892 in fiscal 1951.

The controversy over the old-age problem closed with the committee chairman's admonition: "Honor thy father and mother."

The House group also gave a sympathetic ear to the welfare department's long-standing construction program for improving its municipal institutions.

To complete plans for the new Industrial Home School at the Children's Center, near Laurel, Md., A. G. Hutson, city construction director, asked for $38,000. Total cost of the building is estimated at $1,600,000.

Hutson also asked $750,000 to start construction of the Home for the Aged infirmary at Blue Plains.

County 'Rule' Talks Heard By Chamber

The board of directors of Prince Georges Chamber of Commerce last night declined to take action on the Sothoron bill after six speakers divided for and against the measure.

Speaking in favor of the bill, President Nicholas Orem said it was incorrect to call it a "home rule bill."

It would benefit the county, however, he said, by eliminating laws that now hamstring the commissioners.

The bill also was viewed as a step forward by Herbert Wells, who said it would provide more working time for the commissioners.

Otis Stevens, Bladensburg town councilman, expressed the general feeling of the opposition that the people have not had enough time to study the bill.

Another opponent, Harry A. L. Barker, favored, instead of the Sothoron bill, creation of a commission to study the county government.

Orem said the bill probably will be brought up again at the chamber's full membership meeting February 28. Last night's meeting was held in the County Service Building, Hyattsville.

Greenbelt Tax Muddle Still Unsolved

Efforts to solve the tax muddle of the city of Greenbelt, which threatens the city services, will be continued today by the city attorney and counsel for the Public Housing Administration.

City authorities, who have warned that community's utility services will be cut off Wednesday if tax funds are not forthcoming from PHA, failed to reach an agreement with PHA authorities during a meeting here yesterday.

The City Council had turned down a PHA offer of $154,248 as payment to the city for services rendered this year to 1875 tenants of the agency. PHA is the landlord of the Government-owned community.

The attorneys for the city and the housing agency will attempt to agree today on a final interpretation of provisions of the Bankhead-Black Act under which Greenbelt operates.

Special Aide To Investigate Parking Lots

Witmer Kelley, a former Pennsylvania State motor vehicle official, yesterday was named special investigator for the House District Committee to look into parking lot facilities here.

Chairman John L. McMillan (D., S. C.) said Kelley will start work immediately on a preliminary report.

Recently McMillan filed a resolution calling for a probe into the parking lot situation. The resolution is pending before the House Rules Committee.

Without the resolution, McMillan still can conduct the investigation. Subpena power is the only added authority it would give the committee, McMillan pointed out.

Kelley worked 18 years with the Pennsylvania department of motor vehicles, some of the time as assistant director.

He served in the war as captain in the Air Corps Ferry Command. He is 47, a graduate of Iowa State University and a native of Elensburg, Pa.

800 Attend Dinner Of Northeast Group

Eight hundred persons attended the annual banquet of the Northeast Business Men's Association last night in the ballroom of the Mayflower Hotel.

Gifts were presented to G. Leslie Schafer, past president, and Arthur B. Hartung, chairman of the banquet committee. President is Arthur Jacobs.

Hayes Urges Civil Defense Planning for Blitz of D. C.

Assistant Engineer Commissioner Cites Eventual Chance Of A-Attack Here

By Elsie Carper
Post Reporter

Civil defense planning to prepare the city for atomic attack was urged yesterday by Lieut. Col. Thomas J. Hayes, Assistant Engineer Commissioner of the District.

Hayes, speaking before a meeting of the Washington Building Congress at the Mayflower Hotel, declared "there is no emergency today, no occasion for excitement, or panic, or sensationalism or emotionalism . . . but there is need for advance planning.

"We know that Washington, like any key city, is a possible target, and therefore that we should be prepared."

He said the possibility of enemy attack "is going to be with us for a long, long time to come, and the sooner we recognize that fact and accept civil defense as a regular part of our daily lives, the sooner it will become an effective reality."

Speaks as Official

Hayes said that he was speaking not for the Commissioners but as an official of the District government who has had "the benefit of being a civil engineer" and who has "seen the effects of the bomb at Hiroshima." He said he also based his remarks on careful reading of releases of the National Security Resources Board and the Atomic Energy Commission.

Civil defense has been under study by the District government for over a year, he said, declaring that "an initial statement of policy" will be presented before the Commissioners for review this week.

Hayes said that he could discuss only the effect of atomic bombs of the strength dropped on Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

A Giant Blow

"I have no intention of trying to project my remarks to include the effects of more advanced type of fission bombs, or of fusion bombs, such as the H-bomb," he said.

The effect of a bomb upon a building is that of a giant blow, followed by a steady push, followed by a push in the opposite direction, he commented.

He told the builders that for greatest safety, buildings and their component parts would be based on earthquake-resistant design.

Bridge Error By Engineer Costs $100,000

The engineering error that caused the northern approach walls of the new Highway Bridge to sink 18 inches cost the District $100,000, and delayed the bridge opening by a month.

This was disclosed yesterday with the release of the transcript of hearings on the District budget before a House Appropriations Subcommittee last month.

Brig. Gen. Gordon R. Young, District Engineer Commissioner, told the committee the sinking was caused by a "rather peculiar sort of error." He said the responsibility was shared by a lot of people, but added: "I take it, to begin with, because I permitted the design to go through."

Piles for the bridge proper were sunk about 100 feet to rock, Young told the committee. But piles supporting the walls of the approach ramp were driven only part way to rock, he testified, because (1) tests and experience with nearby bridges indicated it was a "sound procedure," and (2) it was expected to "materially reduce the cost."

The "peculiar" error, he explained, was the failure to allow for the effect of dumping 130,000 tons of fill dirt on top of the earth in which the piles were driven.

Engineering Experts Okay Alexandria Annexation Plan

The engineers who were hired to find out whether Alexandria ought to annex 7½ square miles of Fairfax County land came up with their answer yesterday: Go ahead.

City Councilman Albert A. Smoot, chairman of the city annexation committee, said later this week his group will go over the findings of the engineers with City Council and ask that action be started.

The engineers are R. Stuart Royer & Associates, of Richmond. Their report, released in part by Smoot, contains these conclusions:

Alexandria needs to annex to provide for expansion. Of its present 7 1/3 square miles, "there are only about 500 acres . . . that can be used for additional residential, business and industrial purposes."

The need for recreation areas and parks is "quite evident."

Shirley hwy. "is undoubtedly having an adverse affect on business in Alexandria." (Some 3½ miles of super highway would come into the city under annexation.)

The area "lends itself very nicely" to urban development, "being undeveloped to a large extent so that it can still be properly zoned, planned and controlled."

According to the report, the area soon will contain about 9000 residents, some 2000 of them school children. Only two schools, Lee-Jackson and Lincolnia, are within its bounds.

Financial aspects of the proposed annexation were not released by Smoot. He said a financial statement would be forthcoming after City Council has studied the report.

Tax Charge Fugitive Since '48 Gives Up

Baltimore, Md., Feb. 13 (Spl.).—John Orville Staples, former Washington and Prince Georges County club operator, surrendered here today on a Federal income tax indictment returned in 1948.

Federal officials, who said Staples has been a fugitive under forfeited bond since 1948, immediately jailed him in lieu of $25,000 bond.

Staples, who lived at Decatur Heights, Md., at one time, was operator of the Five O'Clock Club, in the 600 block of Pennsylvania ave. nw., Washington, and the Cabana Club on Naylor rd. in Prince Georges County.

The 1948 indictment against Staples charged he had personal income totaling $41,631 in 1944, 1945, and 1946, but made no income tax returns on that amount. It further charged him with failing to pay $6086 in taxes due from the Cabana Club for certain months of 1946, and $2300 from the Five O'Clock Club in certain months of 1945.

After his indictment, Federal officials said, Staples posted $5000 bond to appear for trial in April, 1948. They said he became a fugitive and the bond was forfeited. Internal Revenue men, officials said, traced him to Canada and Mexico, but were unaware of his return to Baltimore.

He surrendered to Norman P. Ramsey, Assistant United States Attorney, who immeditely asked issuance of a new bench warrant for Staples. Federal Judge W. Calvin Chesnut set the new $25,000 bond figure, and Staples was jailed when he did not furnish it.

For Injuries

Housewife Gets $34,000 Settlement

The wife of a Navy Gun Factory employe yesterday won $34,000 damages for injuries received in a streetcar accident.

The sum will be awarded Mrs. Catherine Aredes, 44, of 410 15th st. ne. It was agreed on in an out-of-court settlement with the Capital Transit Co. in the chambers of District Court Judge Edward A. Tamm, before Mrs. Aredes' suit for damages went to trial.

She and her husband, Patricio, had asked for $270,000 damages. She was injured June 6, 1947, when the streetcar on which she was a passenger struck the rear of another streetcar in the 1200 block of D st. ne. The impact threw her against a fare box, according to her suit.

As a result of the injuries she received, her left eyeball sags from lack of support, she has double vision, she can barely open her mouth and is unable to chew, and she carries "hideous and disfiguring scars," the suit declared. Mrs. Aredes was represented by Attorney Joseph D. Bulman.

Water, Lone Utility, Cut Off For 43 D. C. Slum Residents

By Jack Lartz—The Washington Post

Mrs. Ida Anderson, 1103 Pierce ct. nw., carries water

The water was turned off again yesterday for 43 residents of three slum houses on Pierce ct. nw., a muddy alley a few blocks from Sibley Hospital.

Water is the only utility they have. No heat (except for wood stoves), no light (kerosene lamps are used), no plumbing (even the sinks have no drains).

The same thing happened last summer for the same reason—nonpayment of water rent. In addition, the three ramshackle, dilapidated houses have been condemned to make way for a new Terrell Junior High School.

The District government owns the houses now. The District government office of the water registrar ordered the water turned off.

The District has also ordered the 12 flats in the three buildings at 1132, 1101 and 1103 Pierce ct. evacuated by March 3.

Residents say they have no place to go, don't know where to start.

The National Capital Housing Authority said any of the displaced persons would be given housing priority if they apply, since they are being removed by the District for a public works project.

Last time the water was turned off, a settlement house paid a $54.75 bill. The residents themselves paid a $13.75 bill about the same time "by all chipping in."

The bill presented yesterday is believed to be for $141.

Sabatini Dies At 75; Author Of 40 Books

Adelboden, Switzerland, Feb. 13 (AP).—Rafael Sabatini, creator of Captain Blood, died at his hotel here today. He was 75.

Mr. Sabatini

Author of more than 40 historical novels, biographies and plays, Sabatini for years had gastric ulcers and a weak heart. He came to Switzerland last month.

He was best known for his novels "Scaramouche," "The Sea Hawk," "The Snare," "The Black Swan" and the three Captain Blood volumes. Many of his novels became colorful films.

Medieval Italy was the setting for many of his swashbuckling stories. He was particularly careful in making his backgrounds authentic, spending hours in the British Museum to verify their accuracy.

Among his serious volumes was "Torquemada and the Spanish Inquisition." For this he read voluminous records of tortures inflicted during the campaign against non-Catholics. His books about Cesare Borgia presented a picture of that family differing sharply from the usual version.

In his writing he aimed at turning out 2000 words each morning during the last 18 years he worked at his home at Clock Mill in West Herefordshire, England.

Sabatini was born in central Italy. His father was an Italian singer, his mother an Englishwoman. He was educated in Switzerland and Portugal. He was naturalized in Britain in 1918 after beginning his career on a Liverpool newspaper.

Judge Nations Dies; Former A. U. Professor

Gilbert Owen Nations, former American University professor who once was a candidate for President on a third party ticket, died Sunday night in Park Ridge, Ill., where he was visiting a son. He was 83.

Judge Nations was professor of Roman law, canon law and legal history at American University from 1920 to 1934. He became a probate judge of St. Francis County, Mo., in 1910. He had been living recently with a daughter, Mrs. Leonard S. Ritter, 2745 S. Uhle st., Arlington, Va.

In 1924 Judge Nations was a candidate for President of the United States on the American Party ticket.

He had been a Washington resident since 1916, having served as an elder of the Ninth Street Christian Church for many years. He also was editor of several religious publications.

Born in Perry County, Mo., Judge Nations was admitted to the Missouri bar in 1902.

In 1890 he received a bachelor of science degree from National Normal University, Lebanon, Ohio. He received a master of philosophy degree from Hiram University in 1900. American University conferred a Ph.D. on him in 1919.

He was a 32d degree Mason.

In addition to Mrs. Ritter, Judge Nations is survived by a son, Karl Nations, a former Washington Post employe now with the Chicago Herald-American; another son, Paul D., of Boise, Idaho; two daughters, Mrs. Roy Ellis, Springfield, Mo., and Mrs. Alfred Pyatt, Seymour, Mo.

Funeral services will be held at 2 p. m. Wednesday in Farmington, Mo.

Capt. Hofler, Navy Medical Officer, Dies

Capt. Ralph Hayes Hofler, 50, U. S. N., senior medical officer at the Arlington Navy Annex dispensary for six years until last September, died Sunday at his home, 2006 37th st. se., while eating dinner. He had suffered from high blood pressure for some time.

Capt. Hofler

Captain Hofler, who was retired for disability in January, 1942, and shortly recalled to active service, was detached from his duties in September for treatment at the Naval Medical Center in Bethesda.

He had previously served at the old Naval Medical Rospital here, at the Naval Dspensary here in 1940 and later at the Navy Yard and the Office of Naval Officer Procurement, before being assigned to the Arlington Annex branch dispensary.

His sea duty included assignments on the battleship Arkansas and the aircraft carrier Enterprise.

A native of Gatesville, N. C., Capt. Hofler attended the University of North Carolina. He joined the Navy as an apprentice seaman during World War I and was commissioned in the Navy Medical Corps in 1925.

Funeral services will be held Thursday at the chapel of the United States Naval Hospital in Portsmouth, Va. Burial with full military honors will be in Evergreen Memorial Park in Portsmouth.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Emily Lawrence; a daughter, Virginia, 12, and a sister, Mrs. Carrie H. Brown of Gatesville.

Wheaton Play Site Purchase Near Completion by MNCPPC

Acquisition of a 20-acre recreation site in the Wheaton area by the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission for $62,500 is nearing completion, it was announced last night.

Final purchase papers for the site on Claridge rd. just off Viers Mill rd. are now being drawn, according to Blair Lee, 3d., MNCPPC vice chairman, at a meeting of the Wheaton Citizens Association at the Glenmont School.

Presently owned by Warner E. Pumphrey, Silver Spring funeral director, the property contains a swimming pool, picnic grove, two serviceable buildings and a horse training ring, Lee stated. Plans call for construction of a baseball field and conversion of a stable into a community center unit.

The site adjoins the 11-acre tract where a new elementary school is being built. The commission's policy, Lee stated, is to locate its recreational facilities next to schools as far as possible to provide maximum utilization of both areas.

Purchase funds will be realized from proceeds of the commission's recent $400,000 recreation bond issue, according to Lee's statement.

Acheson Confined by Cold

A cold, described by aides as not serious but requiring rest, caused Secretary of State Dean Acheson to cancel all appointments yesterday. These included plans to confer with E. N. van Kleffens, the Netherlands Ambassador, and Sir Derick Hoyer Millar, British Minister.

2 Men Held For Jury in Slayings Here

Coroner's juries ordered two men held for grand jury actions in the cases of a man and woman who died early Saturday after separate shootings here.

The first inquest was in the death of Robert T. Jackson, 28, of 4920 Benning rd. se. The jury ordered William W. Harley, 31, of 4908 Benning rd. se., held. Testimony showed Jackson and others came to Harley's home Friday night. An argument ensued and Jackson died after receiving a shotgun wound in the chest.

The other inquest was into the death of Mrs. Bernice Arrington, 24, of 3218 4th st. nw. Testimony showed she and a friend, who roomed at 1109 1st st. nw., went to the latter address about 12:30 a. m. Saturday. After experiencing some difficulty in entering, Mrs. Arrington began to argue with John E. Day, 22, who also lived there. She was shot with a pistol. Day was ordered held.

Both were pronounced dead at Gallinger Hospital.

D. C. Druggist Slayer Loses Court Appeal

The United States Court of Appeals yesterday upheld the first-degree murder conviction of Lawrence Goodall, 25, for the holdup-killing of Nathaniel Johnson, 53, a druggist.

Johnson was slain October 12, 1948, in his store, 600 3d st. sw. A woman and a 15-year-old boy who were present at the murder identified Goodall, of 412 Oakdale pl. nw., as the killer.

Goodall is now under death sentence. An accomplice, Edward M. Jackson, 25, of 264 Dixon ct. sw., became a Government witness against Goodall, was allowed to plead guilty to second-degree murder and was sentenced to 15-years-to-life imprisonment.

The Appeals Court decision was written by Judge Wilbur K. Miller, who said that for murder in the course of a robbery, the Government was not required to prove that the killing was intentional.

The evidence showed, the jurist said, that Johnson was shot as he turned and ran from the killer who held a pistol in his hand.

Also overruled was Goodall's plea that he was drunk at the time of the killing and therefore the killing could not result in the extreme penalty.

Mrs. Jillson Granted New Damages Trial

The United States Court of Appeals yesterday ordered a new trial of Mrs. Kathryn S. Jillson's $100,000 damage suit against a Washington psychiatrist.

The first court case was dismissed by Judge Matthew F. McGuire in November, 1948, on the grounds there was a lack of evidence to show that the doctor, Frank S. Caprio, was negligent or malicious.

Mrs. Jillson contended Dr. Caprio had her wrongfully committed to Gallinger Hospital's psychiatric ward. She was found to be sane and released 12 days later.

The appeals court, in an opinion by Judge Henry W. Edgerton, held that the evidence in the case would have supported the charge of false imprisonment. Judge Edgerton pointed out that the law states an allegedly insane person cannot be arrested without a warrant sworn to by "two or more responsible residents" and that a commitment requires the certificate of at least two phsicians.

Yet the evidence, said the court, indicated the doctor's advice to the police caused the arrest and in such a case "he is liable for her arrest and for her imprisonment until she was committed by the court. Not only the perpetrator but the instigator of unlawful violence is fully responsible to its victim."

Dr. Walter Laves To Resign Paris Post With U. N.

Dr. Walter H. C. Laves, of Chevy Chase, Md., and the University of Chicago, will resign his post as American deputy director general of the United Nations Educational Scientific and Cultural Organization.

Dr. Laves

He announced this yesterday in Paris, where he has held the post since 1947, according to the United Press. The resignation, he said, will take effect June 30 for "professional and family" reasons.

Dr. Laves, whose home is at 125 Quincy st., Chevy Chase, has been on leave from his post as political scientist at the University of Chicago since December, 1941. He had held several Government posts here, including foreign affairs consultant to the President for the Bureau of the Budget, and member of United Nations delegations. At his home, it was said last night all members of his family are with him in Paris.

Mrs. Burkitt, 33, Dies; Native of Washington

Mrs. Margaret O'Connell Burkitt, 33, died after suffering a heart attack Sunday night at her home, 349 Boyd ave., Takoma Park, Md.

She was found by her husband, Carroll E. Burkitt, when he was awakened from his sleep at about midnight by his 4-year-old son, John Carroll.

A native Washingtonian, Mrs. Burkitt was a graduate of St. Patrick's Academy. For the past seven years Mrs. Burkitt had lived in Takoma Park, where she was an active member of Our Lady of Sorrows Catholic Church.

In addition to her husband, survivors include three children, John Carroll, 4; Judith Anne, 3; Thomas Paul, 9 months; her father, Dennis J. O'Connell, 16 Buchanan st. ne.; seven brothers, Francis I., William C., Joseph M., both of the Buchanan st. address; Daniel E., 3108 McComas ave., Kensington, Md.; John A., 1527 17th st., north, Arlington, Va.; Edmund Patrick, Chicago, Ill., and Corpl. This Sweetheart Has a Beautiful Sole

By Peggy Preston

ON THIS Valentine's Day in the morning, how would you like to read about a real sweetheart—of a shoe?

It's a dancing shoe, a gay and happy slipper. And when you wear it you want to dance, too. You feel that good.

In fact, it is hardly a shoe at all, but rather a covering that molds to your foot as does a kid glove to your hand. Even the sole is flexible and soft. From the point of view of construction it is as different from the stiff-soled, boxy footgear of today as is the two-way stretch girdle from the outmoded "old ironsides" corset.

Capezio, the dancer's cobbler, makes it, using the principle of the ballet slipper for a pattern. Dancers, whose toes are their fortunes, have worn Capezio shoes for years, both on and off the stage. But now they have come to the attention of nondancers—girls and women who cherish foot-freedom and who dare to be different to attain it.

Have Traveled a Long Way

THESE gentle little slippers have traveled a long way in recent years. Although they belong primarily to Broadway, Park ave. has staked a claim on them. Fashion-conscious editors of Vogue and Harper's Bazaar fancy them, and from Maine to California they are "catching on" with surprising speed.

The little shoes are designed and made today in the same cluttered shop at 1612 Broadway which was opened in 1887 under the sign "Salvador Capezio, Cobbler to Dancers."

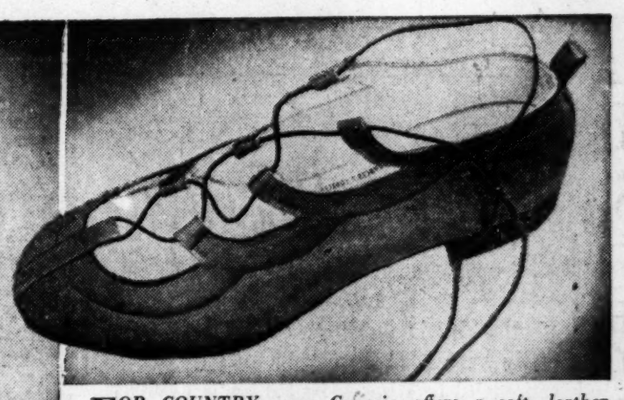
But the shoemaker's ballerina customers soon became spoiled. Why could they not expect the same comfort and freedom in their street shoes as they did in their professional footwear? Such early stars as Rosini, Galli and Vera Fokina came to the shop to demand conservative street versions of their dance shoes. Capezio obliged.

Then followed the well known musical comedy stars—Ann Pennington, Marilyn Miller, and of late, those of such productions as "Oklahoma," "South Pacific," "High Button Shoes," etc. Often they design their own shoes—adding a little heel here, a bit of a strap there. Capezio made them all on the ballet slipper last, adding style and elan.

So a new business was born for Capezio. Each year more and more of the revolutionary shoes have been finding their way into stores throughout the country.

At a showing of Capezios in the new Rose Room of Rich's we saw models to suit every age and taste. For those who like heels there is a fascinating blue kid, with gentle, sloping toe and 2-inch heel. Others have 1-inch heels and still others just a couple of layers of leather at the back.

MEN'S formal opera pump set the style for this "Off-Stage" Capezio shoe, fashioned of patent leather, with flat grosgrain bow on the toe. Models pictured here are available at Rich's



FOR COUNTRY wear Capezio offers a soft, leather ghillie. This one is of beige leather with peg-top heel

Envoy Patron For Contralto's D. C. Concert

Under the patronage of the Ambassador of Greece and Mme. Dendramis, Elene Nikolaidi, internationally famous Greek contralto, will appear in concert at Constitution Hall Monday evening, April 3.

Mrs. Charles S. Dewey has accepted as honorary chairman of the committee sponsoring the concert, and Mrs. George C. McGhee, wife of the Assistant Secretary of State, is active chairman.

Enthusiastic acclaim from audience and critics has been accorded Mme. Nikolaidi since her American debut in Town Hall a year ago. On her current concert tour she is captivating audiences in every major city in which she is appearing.

The beautiful Greek singer is contributing her talent for the forthcoming concert because of her interest in the work being done for young boys at Athens College, an American school in Greece.

Although He Positively Doesn't Love Her, Lad Finally Permitted Nice Girl to Announce Her Engagement to Him; Now He Feels Panicky

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a young man, 21, engaged to a nice girl whom I positively do not love. We started going together about five years ago, and I soon realized I did not love her and never would, but when I disclosed this conviction to her she tearfully asserted her great love for me, which she thought sufficient to take us through life—and, because I wasn't interested in anyone else, I continued to date her for about three years.

Then I began to expand my social range and form friendships with girls in whom I could take a real interest, and I felt that in fairness to Ann, I should break with her completely, because other young men were interested in her and I was not. However, she was furious and sobbed to my family and other relatives, and there was a violent verbal battle in my family about my decision; but at last the break came, much to my relief, after much debating between my father and me.

Father and Son See Differently

IN HIS OWN WAY, my father has my welfare at heart, but his sense of direction conflicts with mine and his concepts seldom agree with mine. For example, I once wanted to work in another city, just to taste pure self reliance, but he blocked it by threatening to prohibit my entering our home again. Also he believes in solid early marriage and having a family, and I believe one should love his chosen mate and not just marry because someone fancies two persons look well together. (Mother has always been wonderful.)

Unfortunately, I have been rather weak in making up again with Ann and we have gone through with an engagement party, and I am having stormy fights and wrestling matches with my conscience as a result. I love my father and want more than anything always to be at peace with him. But I don't love Ann, and I want to break the engagement so that she may go her way and I may go mine.

Please give constructive words to both my father and Ann, so that a great injustice may be averted. Try to inform dad why it is best that Ann and I should not marry. I regret my inadequacy, and I want no more tormenting family arguments and heated verbal blows. I want the love of my family and my freedom also. Isn't that only fair? A. L.

Tough Proposition to Open Dad's Mind

DEAR A. L.: When parents behave like blind wheel horses in the service of tradition, clinging to treadmill pursuit of financial increase or "solid security," it is because they too, when young like you, were insidiously robbed of confidence in their capacity to do a creditable job of direction-finding for themselves—a form of damage done to them by the same types of pressure you're up against.

And when parents find themselves grinding along in that beaten path ("beaten" in more than one sense of the word), and getting on in years, they tend to close their mind very tightly indeed to the thought (or outside suggestion) that a self-elected independent course of experience might have been better worth the effort—or at any rate more interesting in the doing.

This I mention preliminary to saying (and by way of explaining) that I doubt whether "constructive words" of mine on your behalf will produce a liberal change of attitude in your father. But because your plight is pitiful, I shall do what I can to help. You are in a panic state—involved in an emotional crisis that ought to be handled sympathetically, with great respect for your sensitive and decent but utterly confused and conflicted impulses.

Act With Integrity to Maintain Health

AS I SEE the picture, you truly can't abide the prospect of being married to Ann, but on the other hand (as you say) there is nobody else in line to be your sweetheart or wife, and you've been reared (or "conditioned") to do what others expect of you, and your family as well as Ann insistently expects you to marry her. All of which puts driving pressure upon you to slip into the groove they've prepared for you, and though you've tried valiantly to resist their purpose openly and honestly, it seems you are losing the contest.

Thus at present your sensations are those of a drowning man going down for a second time, praying for a miracle to save him, even though all hope seems gone. And if, after glimpsing your dilemma in that light, your father still puts pressure on you to marry Ann and stay under his wing, then you may know he isn't sincerely concerned about your weal or woe, but simply selfishly intent on using you as a form of chattel to give him comfort.

In conclusion I say on your behalf—to marry Ann under duress, if you don't care for her, is to put yourself in line for a nervous breakdown (so-called), which is nature's way of "excusing" an intolerably tormented person from trying to cope further with overwhelming frustration. So, as health insurance, break the engagement if you feel trapped; and if you need a friend to back you up, find a good psychologist to help you transcend your family's views. M. H.

February's Still a Big Month for Birthdays

By Marie McNair and Elizabeth Maguire

THE month of February, notable for the birthdays of Washington and Lincoln, is also an anniversary month for the White House family, and for other prominent Washingtonians of the present.

Mrs. Truman quietly celebrated her sixty-fifth birthday yesterday. Daughter Margaret will mark another milestone on Friday when she will be 26 years old.

Twenty-five years ago today Washington heard the news that a Valentine baby had been born to Speaker of the House Nicholas Longworth and Mrs. Longworth, the former Alice Roosevelt. Two days before that date, Mrs. Longworth had celebrated her own anniversary.

Today Mrs. Longworth is in Westport, Conn. with that daughter, Paulina—now Mrs. Alexander McCormick Sturm—for a family party which will include Mr. Sturm and their small daughter, Joanna.

Congratulations will be due Justice Hugo Black on February 27; they were in order yesterday for Justice Robert Jackson. And Senator Owen Brewster will celebrate his anniversary on George Washington's birthday.

Reception Honors Hindu Ballet Members

A RECEPTION was held at the Indian Embassy last evening for Uday Shankar and members of the Hindu Ballet Company, following their performance at Constitutional Hall. Nearly 150 guests were received by the Charge d'Affaires and Mme. Sen. Yellow tulips and daffodils brightened the rooms, and a buffet supper was served of Indian foods.

A long candlelit table was covered with lace, and silver platters offered curried meats, kibbee balls, yellow peas, peppery salads, and spiced puddings wrapped in silver paper as edible as the spices.

Wives of embassy staff members lent color to the scene in their saris of blue and silver, white and gold, deep wine, emerald green and royal purple.

Those who attended included the Ambassador of Afghanistan and Princess Zohra Naim, the Ambassador of Ceylon and Mrs. Gorea, Lady Franks, wife of the British Ambassador; the Ambassador of New Zealand and Lady Berendsen, the Ambassador of Indonesia and Mme. Sastroamidjojo, the Philippine Ambassador, Joaquin M. Elizalde; the Polish Ambassador and Mme. Winiewicz, the Swiss Minister and Mme. Bruggmann, and the Finnish Minister and Mme. Jutila.

At the ballet before the reception, the Charge and his wife had as guests in their box the Ambassador of Ceylon and Mme. Corea and Mr. and Mrs. Walter Lippmann.

Texas Wives Meet, Honor Mrs. Bartley

WIVES of the Texas delegation in Congress met at a monthly luncheon yesterday at the Old New Orleans Restaurant. A special guest was a visitor from Texas, Mrs. Edward Bartley, who is sister of Speaker of the House Sam Rayburn. Mrs. Bartley is staying with her son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Robert T. Bartley of Silver Spring.

A small dinner for her will be given this evening by Mr. and Mrs. Francis Wilson Wozencraft, and Thursday evening Mrs. Bartley will attend the Jefferson-Jackson Day dinner.

Among those at yesterday's luncheon were Mrs. Tom Connally; Mrs. Burrus Jackson, another Texas visitor; Mrs. Lyndon B. Johnson, and Mrs. Dale Miller.

Sweden Has New Embassy Residence

A NEW embassy residence has been purchased by the Swedish Government. The house is the former residence of Mr. and Mrs. David Lawrence at 3900 Nebraska ave., just one block north of Ward Circle. Some time in May the Ambassador and Mme. Boheman plan to move, and the old residence on R st. will be turned into a chancery office.

About eight acres of lawn and woodland surround the new house, which is described as "nameless modern but pretty." Fair-haired little Anders, age 3, son of the Ambassador and Mme. Boheman, is especially happy about the change, as the imposing embassy on R st. does not even boast a small garden.

Byron Quartet Bows On Video Tonight

THE Byron boys—four of former Representative Katharine Byron's five sons—will make their television debut tonight. As a four-piece band, Bill, James, David and Goodloe will whoop it up on the "Original Amateur Hour," which comes in at 10 p. m. from New York on channel four.

The late Representative William D. Byron, whose seat in Congress was occupied by his widow, started his boys off early to be musicians. Mr. Byron himself did a harmonica banjo and tap dancing act, a never-ending scource of amazement to his family and friends.

Tonight, Bill, who's a Maryland University student, will play the guitar rigged up with an amplifier; James will play both piano and accordion; Dave, who's 17, will give with the traps, drums and bells, and Goodloe, taking time out from studies at the University of Virginia, will play the piano.

Lady Franks Will Travel to Wedding

LADY FRANKS, wife of the British Ambassador, is going to Gastonia, N. C., on Saturday to attend the wedding of Miss Betty Dixon and Gordon Huson. The latter was Economic Information Officer at the British Embassy here until September, 1949, when he went to Ottawa, Canada, to be head of the United Kingdom Information Office there.

On his way from Canada to Gastonia this week, Mr. Huson will stop off Wednesday in Washington to be the overnight house guest of his best man, Peter Casson, British second secretary. A cocktail party for Mr. Huson will be given by Mr. Casson that evening and Lady Franks will be among the guests.

Others from the British Embassy who will attend the wedding in Gastonia on Saturday include the Naval Attache and Mrs. Holmes, the Counselor and Mrs. Burns, and Peter Stephens, first secretary. The Ambassador, Sir Oliver Franks, is in London, and will return to Washington next week.

The bride-elect is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Kay Dixon of Gastonia. Her wedding at Main Street Methodist Church will be followed by a reception at the Gaston Country Club.

Public Speaking Class Entertained

MME. RAZA, wife of the Military Attache of Pakistan, entertained at home yesterday afternon at a tea for fellow members of Mrs. Hugh Butler's public speaking classes. Nearly 60 guests attended, and after tea, color motion pictures of Pakistan were shown.

In the gathering were Mme. Sastroamidjojo, wife of the Indonesian Ambassador; Mme. Corea, wife of the Ambassador of Ceylon; Mme. Ispahani, wife of the Ambassador of Pakistan, and Mme. Haikal, wife of the Minister of the Hashemite Kingdom of the Jordan.

Two Brides-Elect Share Party Honors

MISS NORRISA POULSON, daughter of Representative and Mrs. Norris Paulson, whose marriage to Alfred W. Brandt, jr., will take place on Saturday, and Miss Jane Ellsworth, daughter of Representative and Mrs. Harris Ellsworth, who will be married in May to Thomas F. McKenna, shared honors at a luncheon yesterday at the Congressional Club. Hostess was Mrs. Hal Holmes, wife of Representative Holmes of Washington.

The brides-elect received copies of the Congressional Cook Book, with recipes autographed by the guests. Carrying out the kitchen theme, Mrs. Holmes had fashioned corsages from dish mops and crepe paper for the two honor guests.

Thailand Ambassador Host at Dinner

MR. AND MRS. CHARLES S. Reed were honored last evening at a dinner given by the Ambassador of Thailand and Princess Wan Waithayakon at the embassy. Mr. Reed is director of the office of Philippine and Southeast Asian Affairs of the State Department.

Other guests last week were Jean Daridan, Minister Counselor of France; the British Counselor and Mrs. H. A. Graves; Mr. and Mrs. William S. B. Lack; Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth P. Landon; Mr. and Mrs. Teg C. Grondahl;

Mrs. Henry D. Flood entertained a group of 16 young people at dinner last evening in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Harris, the latter the former Miss Wendy Wadsworth, daughter of George Wadsworth, United States Ambassador to Turkey who is at present in Washington. Mr. Harris is with the State Department.

Robert Gabriel entertained at luncheon yesterday at the La Salle Du Bois. His guests were Edward N. Burnham, Lawrence J. Bernard, John E. Shea, Paul A. Porter, James C. Black, Edward K. Wheeler, Ralph Bogart, Parker N. Nolan, Dr. Thomas Webb, Thomas Lennon and Fleming Bomar.

Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Royall will arrive in Washington this morning and will be in their apartment at The Mayflower through Friday.

ANNE

Take Suits, Sheets, Sugar and—Of All Things—Tea to England, Reader Advises Folks Crossing the Pond

DEAR ANNE:

Since I was born in England and know the climate as well as anyone, I'd like to give some advice to L. H. W., the reader who recently asked about clothing and other details of living there.

Take two good suits along, three if possible, so they will last you the two years you may be there. Of course, you will need several blouses and I think you'd be wise to add two warm ones, such as wool jersey or flannel with long sleeves.

For summer, take a lightweight coat to wear in the evening over cotton or silk dresses. Take a good warm coat for winter, and a rain coat is very important, too, as well as umbrella and rubbers. If you are of a cold nature, two or three sets of woolen underwear would be appreciated. Take all these things from here, as you can get them much more cheaply and easily on this side.

As for sheets and towels, I would say, yes, take all you can. Whilst things are better there now, it is still hard to get such things. As for food, you could take canned bacon, ham, tongue, salmon, and roast beef, as there are restrictions on some of these things. They have plenty of good fresh fish. Also take extra sugar, rice, currants, coffee, and tea. Cosmetics also are scarce.

I wish you good luck and hope you will get to like whatever part of England you are in. I do hope you will visit the English countryside in the summer. It is beautiful.

E. B.

THANKS TO E. B. and others for their letters about living in England. All are being forwarded to L. H. W.

DEAR ANNE:

Ever since you began your column in The Washington Post, I have made a scrap book of all the many useful answers you have given us readers. On the front of my book, I have in bold printing, cut from a newspaper, the words "THIS IS HOW."

I am sure if other readers would try making a scrap book from your answers, it would save their time and yours having to repeat the same question and answer over again.

Constant Daily Reader.

DEAR ANNE:

In a carelessly packed suitcase, a bottle of colorless nail polish spilled on two dresses, leaving a couple of fairly large spots which do not respond to ordinary cleaning fluid. The spots have hardened and I am told that acetone in polish remover would destroy the fabric. What do you suggest? E. C.

Acetone will eat into acetate rayon or vinyon, so you have to be pretty careful about using polish remover unless you're sure of the fabric.

You can test a small snip of material to see if acetone harms it. If it does, use this method of removing the polish: Wet the stain well with carbon tetrachloride. Apply a drop or two of banana oil. Brush lightly with a soft cloth, using an upward motion to pick up dissolved polish. Repeat if necessary.

SERVING dinner for the man of your heart tonight? He'll love this Valentine treat—Strawberry and Cake Deluxe.

To make it, first beat two egg whites with fork or wire whip until they're stiff but not dry. Then slowly beat in ¼ cup sugar and a few drops of vanilla. Place a block of frozen strawberries (just as they come from the package) on a slightly larger piece of cake standing on piece of cardboard. The block should be firm enough to hold shape but soft enough to slice as strawberries do not melt during the baking.

Cover cake and strawberries with meringue. Brown quickly in hot oven (450 degrees). Slip from cardboard onto platter and serve immediately. This recipe serves four

DEAR M.B.L.:

I saw your letter in "Ask Anne" the other day about removing crayon marks from wallpaper. I wonder if you know about the special crayons made with a soap base instead of an oil or grease base?

They are easily washed off all washable surfaces—wonderful when you have kids that like to mark on things with crayons. Several stores here have them. One where I recently bought some can be reached by telephoning Republic 1745. P. R. C.

Philippine Reconstruction Charted

By Genevieve Reynolds

FRANK A. WARING, chairman, United States Philippine War Damage Commission, yesterday said that Filipinos receiving reimbursements for their war-damaged properties are not squandering the funds on luxuries. He spoke before the Women's National Democratic Club.

The speaker said that the United States Damage Commission had conducted impartial surveys to learn the facts. Results of the survey, he said, show that the funds have gone where they were intended—to rehabilitate the Philippine economy. Exceptions, he added, do not exceed 1 percent of the total.

In 1946 Congress passed the Philippine Rehabilitation Act, which authorized the appropriation of 400 million dollars for the payment of private property claims for war damages in the Philippines. Congress also established the United States-Philippine War Damage Commission to adjudicate these claims and to distribute the funds.

Added New Capital

According to Waring, small claimants have reconstructed or repaired their homes, purchased land or bought work animals, farm implements, tools and essential clothing. And the large claimant has taken his war damage funds, and of necessity, added new capital to advance the rehabilitation.

For example, the commission head pointed out that on December 31, 1949, those with claims in excess of $50,000 had received a total of 39 million dollars from the commission, but had invested a total of 116 million dollars or three times the amount received from the commission.

Waring said that the commission plans to conclude its work by December 31, 1950, four months ahead of the termination date fixed by Congress.

Besides the 400 million dollars authorized for payment of damaged private property, Congress also authorized 120 million dollars to assist the Philippine government in repairing the tremendous damage to its public structures and facilities. Of this amount, 57 million dollars was allotted to the War Damage Commission for the reconstruction of hospitals, schools and government buildings.

Reports on Progress

Reporting on the progress, Waring said that these funds were spent for the most urgent projects. These include hospitals with accommodations for 3000 bed patients, schools for three million students and water facilities to care for the needs of 6,700,000 persons. They provided work for more than 16,000 laborers.

In addition, the Legislative Building where the Philippine Congress meets has been restored, as have the Supreme Court and office building for the executive branch of the government. Also restored are all the provincial capitol buildings and city halls of chartered cities throughout the country.

United States prestige in the Far East is inextricably bound up in the success of the Philippine experiment in self government which we promoted, Waring concluded. He cautioned that all southeast Asia has its attention focused on the way democracy functions in the Philippines.

Mrs. Oscar Chapman, program chairman, introduced the speaker. Mrs. Julian Friant, club president, presided and introduced the guests at the head table, including Mrs. Emmett O'Neal, wife of the former United States Ambassador to the Philippines.

MRS. W. A. LEESE, vice president of the D. C. Opti-Mrs. Club, presents a baton to Andrew G. Bodnar, leader of the Washington Boys Club Concert Band, at the club's luncheon held yesterday at the Washington Hotel. The baton was made by a band member in the Boys Club workshop. Guest of honor and speaker at the luncheon, Bodnar outlined plans for the concert to be given by the Washington Boys Club March 9 at Constitution Hall

One on the Aisle—

Profile, Jr., Has Gray Hairs at 17

By Richard L. Coe

JOHN BARRYMORE, jr., at 17, has flecks of gray hair, but then, as he explains, his grandfather, Maurice Costello, was white at 19.

The Great Profile's son will be seen in his first picture Thursday at the Warner, "The Sundowners," and is now testing his wings at influencing people first-hand on a cross-country tour.

He's a bit over 5 feet 10, slight, sharp-featured and has largish hands that suggest he'll grow into them. He's already completed his second picture, "High Lonesome," for Eagle Lion, and in that has the lead.

Ask him if he doesn't think he's forcing his career a bit and you get the not unexpected reply that he doesn't think so. "I'm only sorry I didn't decide to become an actor sooner. In this career you can't get started early enough."

Brought up by his mother, Dolores Costello, young John thought until two years ago that he'd like to become a chemist or a physician like his stepfather, Dr. John Vruwink of Beverly Hills.

Herself one of the loveliest women ever seen on the screen, Dolores Costello long opposed a theatrical career for this offspring of two theatrical families. But Director George Templeton persuaded Mrs. Vruwink to give her son a chance under his tutelage. Aunt Ethel and Uncle Lionel have gone on record solidly for their young nephew, and now he feels it's up to him.

Traveling with an oldtimer whom you've seen in almost every Western or folksy picture ever made, Chill Wills, Johnny's in good hands. When they make joint personal appearances, Chill harks back to his carnival days for the first part of their act, then "quiets 'em down" to present the latest of the Barrymores.

JOHN BARRYMORE, JR.
. . . Makes Like Dad

"When we planned a tour," Johnny says, "they asked me what I could do, and we somehow decided on the third of the 'Hamlet' soliloquies. I do it my own way, though I've heard my father's and other actors' records."

Saw Father Only Once

"The kid does it beautifully," Chills puts in, "and to the kids he's been playing to, it means something because he can speak their language."

Until some school pals egged him into seeing a revival of "The Great Profile," Johnny had never seen his father on the screen. Since then he's seen one other shot—a three-second Metro trailer from "Richard III" and one with Greta Garbo.

"The similarity of his expressions and gestures to mine staggered me," says Johnny. "It was upsetting that I should be so like him, a man I can hardly remember."

His parents were divorced when he was 3 and the lad has only one recollection of his father. He was 7 when Barrymore visited him at Christmas and brought him a model sailing boat which he still has.

The casual observer is struck by two Barrymore habits in the lad. Whether they're inherited or acquired I don't know, but he does twist his eyebrows around and he does use those large hands the way we've seen all the Barrymores use them.

What the future will bring and whether he can overcome the natural strikes against so fabled a name, only time will tell.

Shankar Dances Still Enchanting

By PAUL HUME

Uday Shankar and his Hindu dance company filled Constitution Hall last night with new sights and sounds.

The great Hindu dancer has grown and changed since we saw him over a decade ago. His art is no less enchanting today than it was then. It presents a difference to the eye which is no less pronounced for all its intangibility.

This difference seems to lie in the immediacy with which Shankar's materials and dancing now reach our western eyes. His wife, Amala, and the entire company, employ the same principles we saw when Shankar was a new name and figure in our theaters.

The traditions reaching down to today by which Indian dancing is governed are those of the master Bharata, who wrote in the fifth century A. D. In the mature hands of today's Shankar, they seem more human—more understandable. A kind of fragility is absent but in its place has come a kind of emotional richness we did not feel previously.

There is no precise parallel in our experience for the art of Shankar. The teaching of Hindu dancing in its use of eyes, arms, fingers, the upper part of the body, and the frequent moments of almost complete repose, are Oriental manifestations of art which we seldom see.

The music accompanying the dance, and heard also in solo and ensemble presentations is, except for Chinese music, probably the oldest musical art in the world. The tambura, vina and sitar, and the drums—the tabla and banya—make sounds and rhythmic patterns of exotic allure.

To hear Karandikar play an extended improvisation on his series of tablas is an exciting moment. The pictures that crossed the stage last night were of striking quality.

As Hindu music is primarily designed to heighten the moods of the various hours of the day, each composition has its own characteristic "raga" or mood. With this background, the small but brilliant company of dancers brought forth a procession of emotional moods and psychological stiuations that are the basis of their dancing.

It is a rich art—one we can hardly study in our country, but one that enriches when we observe it.

A Perennial

No Hamming In Celluloid 'Rigoletto'

"Rigoletto" is a hardy bloomer.

It has been sung more than 200 times at the Metropolitan Opera. It will celebrate its hundredth birthday next year. And it shows no sign of fading from public favor.

Now it appears in a film version, complete from the first notes of the overture to the gruesome finale. When "Rigoletto" was first seen it was called "repulsive and vulgar." Its story is still both of those.

You probably remember the choicer details: how Rigoletto, court jester to the Duke of Mantua, spends time procuring feminine company for his boss' attentions; and how his own daughter is kidnaped by unfriendly courtiers for the same purpose.

"RIGOLETTO." Superfilm release of the opera by Giuseppe Verdi, screened in the Rome Opera House with the Rome Opera orchestra and singers from La Scala Opera, Milan. English synopsis before each of four acts. Conducted by Tullio Serafin. Directed by Carmine Gallone. At the Dupont.

THE CAST

Rigoletto	Tito Gobbi
Duke of Mantua	Mario Filippeschi
Gilda (voice)	Lina Pagliughi
Gilda (action)	Marcella Govoni
Sparafucile	Giulio Neri
Maddalena	Anna Maria Canali
Monterone	Marcello Giorda
Conte di Ceprano	Giuseppe Varni

And how Rigoletto plans the duke's murder, only his daughter, Gilda, gets the knife instead. Yes, it's dandy—just the thing for the kiddies. But it's opera, and Verdi's music has been packing opera houses for a century.

The film is brilliant from start to finish. Screened in the Rome Opera House, it has a realistic impact due to the splendor of the scenery and staging. The orchestra of that house, under Tullio Serafin, sounds magnificent.

The singers are leading artists from Milan's La Scala, with Tito Gobbi in the title role, and Linda Pagliughi, greatest coloratura soprano singing today, as Gilda.

The voices come off the sound track well and the balance between singers and orchestra is good. Serafin spent a decade at the Metropolitan during its greatest days. His Verdi is powerful, moves swiftly and with great beauty. It is amazing to hear Rigoletto sound so honest and unhammed-up.

Marcella Goyoni acts the role of Gilda for Pagliughi. Other singers do their own acting. Mario Filippeschi as the Duke is not the great singer that Gobbi is, but he is more than adequate. The best of the cast is excellent.—P. H.

New Utah Stone In Washington Monument Urged

A half-obliterated sandstone commemorating the Territory of Deseret at the 220-foot level of the Washington Monument is not quite adequate for the State of Utah, Gov. J. Bracken Lee believes.

The Governor has written National Capital Parks suggesting that the old stone be replaced. Some latter day Utahans don't even know that Utah used to be the Territory of Deseret.

Parks Superintendent Root said yesterday he had suggested instead an identification plate under the old stone or a new stone in a different place.

Credit Load Of Consumers Thought Safe

The $18,700,000,000 of consumer credit now in force in the United States is not too heavy a load in view of the present high national income. Furthermore, the credit load can safely go to 20 billion dollars.

These were the conclusions yesterday of speakers at a panel discussion before members of District 12 of the National Retail Credit Association, in convention at the Hotel Statler.

Speakers at the panel discussion included Nimrod A. Olson, Wilmington, Del.; Howard A. Clarke, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Bernard C. Gilbert, Wheeling, W. Va., and Joseph A. White, of Pittsburgh, who is secretary of the group.

The speakers also concluded there is no present reason for restoration of Government controls on consumer credit.

Earlier, the association's legislative committee adopted a resolution demanding that Congress pass a law immediately to cut or eliminate excise taxes. Members of the commitee said a survey has shown that after President Truman asked Congress for a cut in the excise levies buying of items covered by the taxes dropped off materially. The public, the committee found, is waiting for the tax cuts.

The committee said the survey showed a chain reaction of unemployment in merchandising establishments handling the taxed items as result of the slump in buying. The convention will continue through today.

Landon School Fathers To Attend Symposium

Modern methods of teaching will be the subject of a symposium to be held Wednesday by the Fathers Club of Landon School for Boys at the school auditorium at 8 p. m.

The meeting marks as innovation for the Fathers Club which for the first time has invited mothers of Landon pupils to attend. Headmaster P. Landon Banfield and members of the school faculty will conduct the symposium.

Miami Beach Man Indicted In Bribe Offer

Miami, Fla., Feb. 13 (AP). — A county grand jury today indicted Harry Plissner of Miami Beach on a charge of having offered a $200,000 bribe to Councilman Melvin Richard.

The grand jury said the purpose of the bribe was to get Richard's agreement to an exclusive punchboard and bookie monopoly at Miami Beach.

Plissner, who served as Richard's campaign manager when he was elected last spring, recently began a recall movement against the young councilman.

Although the councilman never publicly named the person allegedly offering the bribe, Plissner himself told the Miami Beach Civic League on January 18 that he had acted as an intermediary.

Earlier, Publisher Reubin Clein was sentenced to 30 days in jail for refusing to tell the grand jury where he obtained information for an article that appeared in his weekly, Miami Life.

Circuit Judge Charles E. Carroll found Clein in contempt of court.

Carroll said Clein's refusal to divulge the "whole truth" obstructed the grand jury's investigation of gambling.

Coast 'Capone' Reported Muscling in on Cohen

Sacramento, Calif., Feb. 13 (U.P.). Jack Dragna, described as "The Capone of Los Angeles," threatens to push Mickey Cohen out as a top gangleader, the California Crime Commission reported tonight.

A commission report said Cohen has backed down on conflicts between his gang and Dragna's so far, and told of desertions of Cohen men to Dragna.

Tucker Dealers File New Plan Of Financing

Chicago, Feb. 13 (AP).—A group of dealers and distributors today filed a reorganization plan with trustees of the Tucker Corp.

The rear-engine automobile firm is in Federal Court for possible reorganization under bankruptcy laws. Its president, Preston Tucker, and seven of his associates recently were acquitted on mail fraud charges in the 28-million-dollar enterprise.

The group plan filed today by Theodore W. Miller, a lawyer, contemplates that present stockholders and dealers will finance the reorganized company and be in complete control through exchange of stock.

It provides for 25 million dollars in capital through issuance of 5 percent cumulative participating preferred stock, and 12 million dollars more through issuance of debentures to be purchased by dealers at the rate of $200 as each of 60,000 cars is delivered.

Murphy's Net In Year Dips To $9,001,527

By S. Oliver Goodman

Net income of G. C. Murphy Co. totaled $9,001,527 or $4.46 a common share in 1949, President P. L. Sample reported yesterday.

Sample

This compared with $9,581,331 or $4.76 a share in 1948, which was a record high for the chain store system.

Sample said that 1949 sales increased for the eleventh consecutive year totaling $141,310,518. This exceeded the previous year by 2.7 percent. Average sales per store for the 218 in operation at year end were $648,213. The system operates six stores in metropolitan Washington.

Inventories at yearend were up $1,065,142 to $18,149,242, reflecting the increased number of stores in operation.

Working capital declined slightly from $25,960,330 to $25,705,213. Total current assets as December 31 were $38,289,779, including $20,140,537 cash and Government securities. Current liabilities were $12,584,566.

Earned surplus at the end of 1949 was $36,668,038, reflecting the addition of $4,729,993.

During 1949, Sample reported, five stores were purchased, four others were opened, 16 were enlarged, four were completely renovated and two were moved into larger buildings.

HOLIDAY: Principal security and commodity exchanges, with the exception of livestock markets, were closed yesterday in observance of Lincoln's Birthday. On February 22, similar closing schedules will be followed as the Nation observes Washington's Birthday

WHO'S WHO TODAY: Jesse W. Sweetser, former Washington staff member of Curtiss-Wright Corp., has been named assistant to the president, in charge of sales and contract administration of the Glenn L. Martin Co. . . . Gilbert T. Hodges, former chairman of the executive committee of the New York Sun, has been appointed to the executive staff of Dow Jones & Co., Inc., publishers of the Wall Street Journal . . . J. F. McCarthy has been elected to the newly created post of vice president for finance of Curtiss-Wright Corp. . . . William K. Beard, jr., has been named permanent president of Associated Business Publications and James G. Lyne to the new post of chairman of the executive committee.

CREDIT: "It is becoming increasingly evident that credit played a more important role in trade activity in the last half of 1949 than for many years previous," the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond reported yesterday. "While consumer credit at commercial banks in the (Fifth Federal Reserve) District was rising 28 percent during 1949, there was a gain of 83 percent in automotive installment paper purchased, and of 20 percent in direct automotive loans. Other sales credit apparently was carried by the stores and may have been reflected in expanded commercial bank loans."

GROWTH: Assets of the Nation's savings-loan associations amounted to 14½ billion dollars at the end of 1949, an all-time high and an increase of nearly 11 percent for the year. This was reported yesterday by Henry A. Bubb, president of the United States Savings and Loan League, who added that reserves of the institutions crossed the billion dollar mark last year for the first time.

EARNINGS: Vick Chemical Co. reported net income of $3,234,637 or $2.30 a common share for the six months ended December 31, compared with $2,936,459 or $2.08 a share in like 1948 period. Other earnings statements:

MARYLAND

ATTENTION SUBDIVIDERS

If you are not a subdivider but you want to become one here is your opportunity to make several million dollars in a few years. There are about 500 acres of land located about 4 blocks over the District line in the zone of the new South Capitol st. Bridge. This bridge is operating now with a capacity of 50,000 automobiles daily. This bridge brings our property within 12 minutes of the heart of Washington. If you ride to the D. C. line stop your car a moment and look ahead and see a big woods. That's this 500 acres. If you look to the right and look to the left you'll observe about 100 million dollars worth of apartments and homes building right up to our property. Of this 500 acres we have already sold 100 acres. The remaining 400 you can have for $3000 an acre . . . and most of this property will be commercial and shopping centers. To give you an idea of what shopping centers are worth: On the Virginia end of the bridges it is worth about $500,000 an acre. Do you want to see what benefits the development of land can do for a neighborhood? Well, U. build Chevy Chase, D. C., when that was all woods. I paid $500,000 for 400 acres. Now 1 acre of that same land at McKinley st. and Connecticut ave. is worth more than I paid for the 400 acres. I bought this 500 acres S. E. for $500 an acre 20 years ago, expecting this bridge to be built much sooner than it was built. Now there is no guessing. The bridge is built and in operation. You ought to make 20 million dollars there in a few years.

I'm in my 83rd year and I'm settling my own estate and I'm turning this over to a young man. This is a young man's job. Very small amount of cash payment will handle this, provided you have good credit and have faith in yourself and faith in the growth of Washington.

Maryland House Beats Welfare Bill

Annapolis, Md., Feb. 13 (AP). Delegates from Maryland counties crying "outrageous power grab," defeated tonight a bill which would have given the State wider jurisdiction over distribution of local public relief.

The 66-36 setback to the Department of Public Welfare came after the House had wrestled an hour and a half.

The bill would have stipulated that the State Department could have power to overrule local welfare boards on their decisions as to who should get relief and how much.

Prince Georges County led the drive against the bill and was joined by a majority of the other delegations outside Baltimore City—Democratic and Republican. Speaker Sybert (D., Howard) and Majority Leader Pumphrey (D., Prince George's) were listed among the "no's" when the roll was finally called.

The relief debate topped the Monday night activities of both houses. The other major development was introduction of a 100 million-dollar soldiers' bonus bill by Delegate McNulty (D., Anne Arundel), and 48 other members of the House.

The Senate passed along four bills to the House, including one which would make it harder for a minor to get—and keep—a driver's license.

It also passed a measure to impose a road use tax on trucks which make Maryland motor carriers pay special taxes for the privilege of carrying cargo over their highways.

The 100-million-dollar bonus bill was backed on its introduction by more than a third of the House.

Delegate McNulty (D., Anne Arundel), prime mover of the bill, said except for the amount of a bond issue to finance the bonus, his measure is similar to one delivered to the Senate last week. It would require approval of the voters at a referendum in the November general elections.

If approved by both House and Senate, signed by Governor Lane and accepted in the referendum, the measure would allow Maryland voters of World War II up to $500 apiece. Within that maximum, each month of service overseas between September, 1940, and September, 1945, would be worth $15; each in this country, $10.

By Federation

Plan Backed To Amend Charter

Plans to amend the Montgomery County charter by liberalizing borrowing powers were approved last night by the Montgomery County Civic Federation, with minor reservations.

The present charter requires a public referendum on any bond issue or borrowing in excess of one tenth of the assessed valuation of the county. It also includes debts of special tax districts, the Washington Suburban Sanitary District, and the Maryland National Capital Park and Planning Commission, in the over-all 10 percent county debt limitation.

The County Council has proposed informally that the State Legislature be asked to remove the referendum limitation, and exempt the special district and commission bonds from the county debt limit.

At a meeting at the Bethesda Elementary School, the Federation approved a series of resolutions by its committee on finance and budgets. These measures aproved the proposed financing changes, but asked that a referendum be held on the proposed changes, similar to the one by which the charter was adopted. Approximately 100 persons were present.

Farmers Hit Upper County Planning Unit

Farmers in Montgomery County last night asked for more time to consider a proposed ordinance that would create an upper Montgomery County Planning Commission.

They were among 150 persons who crowded the Rockville Court House to attend a public hearing on the measure.

The attitude of rural residents was summed up by W. Lawson King, a Gaithersburg dairy farmer, who declared he is opposed to the planning act "at present" and that no one has obtained the ideas of the farmers on the subject.

He said he felt there was "some good" in the plan but told the council it is "working too fast" and has "excited" the people too much.

The ordinance would create a five-man commission which would prepare and recommend regulations for zoning, subdivision control, highway and other planning matters for the area of the county now out of the jurisdiction of the Maryland National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

Among those indorsing the plan were Irving C. Root, superintendent of the National Parks Service; Mrs. C. M. Derryberry of the County League of Women Voters; Clark Daniel, president of the Home Builders Association of Washington, and Blair Lee 3d, vice chairman of the MNCPPC.

Ruth Weyand Asks Dismissal of Affections Suit

Ruth Weyand, attorney, yesterday filed a motion in District Court asking that the alienation of affections suit against her be thrown out because it contained "scandalous and indecent" matter.

The suit was filed by Mrs. Olive Perry, of 2433 Ontario rd. nw., asking $50,000 damages. She charged she lost the affections of her husband, Leslie S. Perry, a legislative counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Perry then sued to enjoin his former wife from going ahead with her suit, swearing he had married Miss Weyand, assistant general counsel for the National Labor Relations Board, last September 26.

Lack of Nickels Makes It Tough For Store Clerk

When Mrs. Ruth Mathews argued with two customers last night that she had no nickels to make change for a telephone call, her difficulty boomeranged at her.

The pair held her up, she told police, took about $9 from a High's Ice Cream store where she is a clerk. Then she had no nickel for a phone call and had to run to a neighbor's to notify police.

Mrs. Matthews, 27, lives at 5404 Chapel Oaks dr. ne. The store is at 4338½ Sheriff rd. ne. The first of the two intruders, who had a gun, was described by the victim as a brown-skinned Negro, 25 years old, 5 feet 5 inches tall, 150 pounds, gray slouch hat greenish gray jacket, scratches or burns on mouth. No description was given for the other.

Crippled Children Society to Honor 'Poster Girl'

The D. C. Society for Crippled Children will give a birthday party Wednesday for the "Poster Girl" who will be featured in the society drive which also begins Wednesday.

The guest of honor will be Cheryl Ann Chisholm, a victim of cerebral palsy since birth, who will be celebrating her sixth birthday. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Darrell F. Chisholm, 6214 44th pl., Riverdale, Md.

Cheryl, in company with other crippled children and officials of the campaign, will begin celebrating at 10 a. m. at the society's headquarters, 1767 Massachusetts ave. nw.

Cooperation Key to Peace, Says Graham

A United Nations police force, abolition of the veto in matters of atomic energy control and a greater voice for the smaller nations in the U. N. were advocated last night by Senator Frank P. Graham (D., N. C.).

He spoke at the monthly brotherhood meeting of the Interchurch Fellowship of Washington at Calvary Baptist Church, 8th and H sts. nw.

It is America's responsibility, he said, to do everything in its power to make it unnecessary to use the hydrogen bomb.

Senator Graham, who said that President Truman must have "sweated out in some quiet Gethsemane" the decision that the United States should make the H-bomb, said the weapon is far more terrible than the atomic bomb.

He urged a strengthened United Nations, without which "we may have no world in which to begin." The United States, he said, should take the lead in calling a convention of the nations to revise the U. N. Charter.

A human society "with an atomic bomb in its bosom and a hydrogen bomb in its womb" cannot lag long in achieving control of atomic power, he declared.

The North Carolina Senator urged greater democracy within the United States as a means of achieving brotherhood throughout the world.

"This America which was a haven of refugees in the days of its weakness should not in the days of its power become a stronghold of bigots," he declared.

At the meeting the interracial, interfaith group voted to change its name from the Interchurch Fellowship to the Washington Fellowship.

Driver Convicted Of Manslaughter In Fatal Crash

Thomas E. Copeland, 41, of 7237 Arlington ave., Bethesda, was found guilty of manslaughter by automobile in Bethesda Police Court yesterday by Judge James R. Miller.

Testimony showed Copeland's auto collided with a motorcycle ridden by Bennie E. Janak, 28, of 11817 Goodloe rd., Viers Mill Village, on December 27, at Georgia ave. and Seminary rd., Silver Spring. Janak died the next day of his injuries.

Witnesses testified that Copeland's auto was on the wrong side of the street. Police said investigation and markings confirmed this. Copeland testified he might have been "crowding" the center line. Sentence was deferred to Friday. Maximum penalty is $1000 fine or three years imprisonment or both.

Associated Press WIREPHOTO
JOHN AGAR,
recently divorced husband of Shirley Temple, will appear in Beverly Hills Court this morning on a drunk-driving charge. Arrested Sunday night after, police say, he was bumping cars on road ahead of his, Agar said, "Sure I had a few drinks, but I've done nothing wrong"

9 Striking Miners Begin Moonshining

Charleston, W. Va., Feb. 13 (U.P.). Nine miners told Federal court today they turned to moonshining because they had nothing else to do during the coal strike.

Judge Ben Moore put all of them on three-year probation terms with warnings not to repeat the offense. Clarence Hedrick of Putney said he was forced to brew the liquor to support his family.

'Berlin Command'

Airlift Cost U. S. Millions a Month During Blockade

By Brigadier General Frank Howley

This is the tenth of 12 articles taken from the new book, "Berlin Command," which will be run daily in The Washington Post. The author, Brig. Gen. Frank Howley, battled the Russians for four years, from 1945 to 1949, as deputy commander and then commander of American forces in Berlin.

SPRING came back to blockaded Berlin in 1949, rustling her green skirts in the bright sunshine.

No longer did we anxiously scan the skies, as we had in the dread winter months, trying to penetrate the thick veil of fog hanging over the city for food planes that failed to arrive.

No longer did we dolefully contemplate our dwindling stocks, wondering if they ever would be replenished

The airlift was running like clockwork. It had ceased to be a novelty; the swarm of planes overhead had become a noisy factor in humdrum metropolitan life.

Supplies averaged eight thousand tons a day, sometimes hitting 10 thousand. We had plenty of food, and to spare. Reserves were built to new highs. Rations were increased until they stood higher than in the Russian sector, contradicting specious Communist propaganda and, what was more important, we were able to add variety to the monotonous diet of West Berliners.

Then came the record days, when the Russians might just as well have given up, instead of trailing the skeleton of Western wickedness along the international corridors of Paris and New York, and postponing the inevitable end of the blockade.

Millionth Ton

ON APRIL 11, the millionth ton of supplies was flown into Berlin. On April 16, the airlift made 1383 flights, bringing into our three airfields 12,849 tons. Throughout the day, a plane landed in Berlin every 63 seconds.

I went to Tempelhof field that evening to greet the last of the planes—a C-54 with the day's record of flights and tonnage painted on its fuselage. Less than a year ago I had stood at the same airfield and watched the old "Gooney Birds" bring in our first 200 tons of flour, agonized at the prospect of feeding 920,000 families by air

It hadn't seemed possible at the time, but we were doing it, and a suggestion of these record loads would see us holding out in Berlin until the Kremlin toppled into the Red Square.

We definitely had the upper hand in the feeding of Berlin. Germans living in our sector, who—due to Russian pressure of sheer fright when we had to fall back on dehydrated foods during an emergency in the early stages of the blockade—had gone over and registered for food in the Russian sector, began to return.

I had no sympathy with these spineless German backsliders. Two and one quarter million people had stood by us the whole time, even when conditions were at their worst. These few were the quitters.

Proud of the stamina of the majority of West Berliners, I said, "To hell with these weaklings! Let them stay where they are. In fact, if you leave it to me, I'll make it easy for anyone who wants to go to move into the Soviet 'paradise.'"

The British and French didn't share my emphatic view. They contended that the fact the people were shifting their allegiance was a victory for us, and that such persons should be allowed to re-register in our sectors.

Probably Coerced

I DID NOT WANT to appear vindictive, especially since less than 100,000 Germans were concerned, and it was very possible that a proportion of those had been coerced by the Russians. Therefore, I compromised with my colleagues and agreed to give them another chance.

All Berlin knew that we now had the whip hand. In six weeks, more than half the backsliders—about 60,000—left the Made-in-Moscow paradise and registered for airborne food in our sectors.

If the blockade had continued until July, 1950, our daily deliveries would have been 8600 tons, more than twice the amount I had calculated in my original "Basic Assumption."

Plans provided for an increase in the food ration for the winter of 1949-50; the stockpiling of 210,000 tons of coal for domestic heating in addition to normal supplies for power and light; and more freight space for the importing of raw materials and the exporting of finished products.

A committee of Western-powers experts worked for three weeks on these details, based upon the past year's experience, and then forwarded the report to the commandants. At the Kommandatura, opinions on the recommendations differed very slightly, and reflected the desire to increase and improve airlift supplies in Berlin, rather than any contentious national viewpoint.

Both the British and the French favored increasing tonnages, but I was forced to object on the grounds that this question had already gone to the American higher command and that we had obtained as large a committment as it was possible to get.

It must be pointed out, in this connection, that the United States was providing the bulk of air transport.

But the diplomats made these long-range plans unnecessary. The Berlin question had been in the international diplomatic mill for many months. After countless rumors, the Russians lifted the blockade.

Agreement Reached

TALKS between the United States delegrate, Phillip C. Jessup, and the Soviet delegate, Jacob Malik, during the General Assembly of the United Nations at Lake Success, led to an agreement on May 4 by which the four powers—the United States, Russia, Britain and France—resolved to end the blockade and the counterblockade on May 12.

Why the Russians should suggest that date is another mystery. It was just an arbitrary date, but the Russians always stall, even when they're beaten. Perhaps they hoped to save face by delay, as if they didn't have enough faces to make Janus dizzy. However, the Lake Success agreement showed that the Kremlin had had enough and recognized defeat.

With customary unconcern for the men on the spot, Washington neglected to inform us directly in Berlin of what was happening.

I knew nothing about the negotiations, and I am sure that Clay was in the same unenviable position. We didn't even know that the American and Russian delegates at Lake Success were discussing the matter, although we did hear faint rumors that something in our department was developing.

During the blockade, the Berlin airlift cost the United States 32 million dollars a month, but as soon as surface transportation was resumed and food and supplies started coming in through normal channels, this staggering sum diminished.

Lift Continued

HOWEVER, although the pressure was off, we didn't halt the airlift immediately. Air deliveries continued through May, June and July, 1949, at the rate of between seven and eight thousand tons per day.

On the morning of May 12, the City Assembly held a special meeting to celebrate the lifting of the blockade. The three Western military governors — Clay, Robertson, and Koenig's deputy, Moret—were the principal guests, and General Clay made a farewell speech to the Assembly. He left for the States three days later.

My Love, My Valentine

I send this greeting card to you . . . With love in every line . . . And with the hope that you will be . . . My darling valentine . . . Because I offer you my heart . . . And every promise true . . . That I will honor and obey . . . And always cherish you . . . I will be yours to have and hold . . . Beyond the farthest shore . . . Today, tonight, tomorrow and . . . Forever, evermore . . . Your every dream will be my prayer . . . And all I do will prove to you . . . How much I really care . . . And when I hear you whisper that . . . Your loving heart is mine . . . I will rejoice in having won . . . The sweetest valentine.

Uncle Sam Holds Sack; Canadians Help Fill It With Potatoes

While the Agriculture Department wonders how to get rid of its tons of surplus potatoes, Canadian growers are smuggling in thousands of bushels which they're selling to Uncle Sam, at his artificially high prices.

The problem calls for clear thinking and fast action, or first thing you know we'll be subsidizing Canada's output, too.

The thing to do is to beat them at their own game. Let's smuggle American potatoes into Canada at a faster rate than they're smuggling their potatoes into the United States.

Organize a new airlift, and dump the spuds overboard in sparsely populated regions. Reverse the Canol pipeline, and pump through a river of mashed potatoes. Bribe border guards; put our old-time rum-runners to work on this patriotic project.

Let's show the world that anybody who underestimates American ingenuity for wasting money makes a big mistake.

THOUGHT FOR TODAY

Mrs. Webb Taylor of 4713 Wells pkwy., Riverdale, Md., who is trying to get parents interested in their community P-TAs, observes:

"To have the ability to understand the heart of a child is the nicest valentine any parent or teacher could wish for."

TO MY VALENTINE

If you are giving hearts today
To bring this lady joy—
Those lace-edged gay facsimiles—
I want no paper toy.
There's just one heart I want from you
And that's the real McCoy.
E. Culbreth

OLD HOME WEEK

When Transit Radio newscasts were inaugurated, Newsman J. Denis Sartain moved from WINX to WWDC, to take over as news director.

In a few weeks, Newsman Irv Lichenstein left WINX to move to WWDC. Pretty soon Newscaster Ken Evans, who had also done a hitch with WINX, joined the staff at WWDC. And starting this Monday, WINX Sportscaster Bob Wolff switches his program to WWDC.

The boys ought to start a WINX Alumni Club.

PENNY WISE

Curtis P. Mitchell of 1119 Lamont st. nw. recently sent a check to the District's Water Registrar for $16.88.

In a few days, the check was returned to him, together with a letter pointing out that the amount of his bill was $16.89, not $16.88, and wouldn't he "kindly forward correct remittance?"

District Liner Mitchell immediately issued a new check in the correct amount, and sent it off to the Water Registrar, together with a letter which said, in part:

"As a property owner and taxpayer in the District of Columbia, I am gratified that your office is sufficiently concerned with the collection of every penny due for services furnished as to justify the expenditure of man hours, supplies and postage necessary to collect 1 cent, as in this case.

"It would seem that this is a proper instance for application of the well-worn saying, 'Penny wise and pound foolish.'"

Copies of the letter were sent to the House and Senate District Committees.

GIVE-AWAYS

"Kittens and cats, all ages from 3 months up; assorted colors and kinds." (Shepherd 4062 after 6 p. m.)

"Beautiful long-haired, fluffy Persian female, 6 months old." (Wisconsin 4038.)

"Three 10-week-old female puppies; their mother was a pure-bred Dalmatian." (Shepherd 8671.)

"Gray 6-week-old housebroken kitten; will deliver." (Falls Church 7163.)

"Five very cute mixed breed puppies." (North 5098.)

"Intelligent tan terrier with engaging personality wants home in country; 2 years old, but small." (Owens 5553.)

HOUSEHOLD HINTS DEPT.

Jane Dale of 4366 Argyle ter. knows how to get those last few drops of catchup out of the bottle. She writes:

"Tell Jim Mann's wife to put a little vinegar in the bottle and use what emerges in French dressing."

Thanks, Jane, but I feel a bit uneasy about running this type of item. I'd rather not give "Ask Anne" an excuse for starting to use Give-Aways.

MAIL BAG

Dear Bill:

I hate to spoil a good joke, but from the enclosed clipping you can see that the Book-of-the-Month Club double selection is "Father of the Bride" and "Cheaper by the Dozen"—not "Death of a Salesman" as your correspondent stated.

Leona E. Kidwell
4910 Rock Spring rd.
Arlington, Va.

Dear Mrs. Kidwell:

You're both right. I checked before running the item and found that the reverse side of this month's order blank lists "Death of a Salesman" as the second book in the double selection. Apparently purchasers are permitted to take their choice of the two deals.

Bill.

SUGGESTION BOX

What we need now is a law providing severe penalties for any lump of coal that remains unmined during a National emergency.

The OWL isn't the ONLY wise one!

Think of all the wise people who each month deposit some of their earnings in a savings account! They are really wise . . . they know that in the years to come a savings account offers a security they could not have otherwise—and they know it's always handy in case of emergency. Oriental offers a most thrifty way to save.

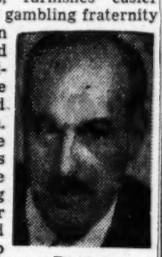
Crime Deals Revealed In Miami Beach

By Drew Pearson

Of all the great metropolitan sucker joints dotting the U. S. A., none, perhaps, furnishes easier picking for the gambling fraternity than southern California and the corresponding coast of the Eastern United States—Florida. And no place in Florida has become a more lush sporting ground for the underworld than the strip of castles-on-the-sand called Miami Beach.



Pearson

And today in Miami Beach one of the most interesting political moves in the U. S. A. is taking place—a move by gamblers and others to remove a Miami Beach city councilman, Melvin Richard, who favors enforcement of the law regarding gambling.

Melvin Richard was elected to the city council with the help of the man who now is seeking to recall him, one Harry Plissner.

"We spent so much time together that my wife once inquired whether I was married to her or to him," says Councilman Richard. And the only thing they really rowed about during the campaign was Richard's anxiety to know where the campaign funds were coming from.

Plissner, however, brushed him off. Furthermore, Plissner did not disclose his own checkered career, and Councilman Richard did not know, among other things, that Harry Plissner's record in Springfield, Mass., showed that on September 21, 1935, he was twice fined $75 for promoting a lottery, and that on June 10, 1936, the convictions were sustained.

He also did not know that after Springfield became uncomfortable Plissner moved to Baltimore, where he was indicted on January 24, 1938, for operating a gambling device; with another indictment on June 20, 1942. In both cases he managed to escape a guilty verdict.

"He told me," says Councilman Richard, "that this strict enforcement policy, which I had espoused during my campaign, made excellent campaign material, but that if I would give it some thought, I would realize that it was ridiculous to carry out such a program. He told me that with the money and power behind the gambling interests, even if I were able to prevent them from operating, which he doubted, the best I could get out of it would be my removal from office by recall.

Councilman Richard, however, refused to go along; and there was a temporary break with his former campaign manager. Finally Plissner came back, this time with a proposition that they open the city to punchboards.

"He told me," says Richard, "That he had engineered a deal whereby the exclusive operation of punchboards would be given to four men. He emphasized that he would be one of the four. He told me that I need not become involved in any fashion, that I would never have to discuss the matter with anyone else, that I would not have to sign any papers, and that I would receive one-fifth of the net income through legitimate channels.

"He described these legitimate channels as fees for legal work, purchases or sales of real estate and other methods which could be devised.

"He told me that the net income from the exclusive punchboard operation was estimated at about $750,000 per year.

"He said that in consideration for my gaining the benefit of this income of approximately $200,000 a year, I would have to consent to the mainteanance of a 'liberal policy' in the City of Miami Beach. He told me that the S. & G. Syndicate, the most powerful gambling group in the city, would then open and commence operations as in years past.

"He said that I would be permitted to level vicious attacks at the S. & G. Syndicate and upon the gambling gentry at council meetings," continued Councilman Richard, "but that I was never to discuss the matter with the city manager or the chief of police privately.

"I would ride with the chief of police and several police officers in a squad car on certain occasions and we would raid certain important gambling locations. He assured me these raids would be highly dramatic, and there would be glowing newspaper reports and that the public would be satisfied that I was bending every effort to keep my campaign promises."

Councilman Richard, however, refused to cooperate. He told Plissner that it was "the craziest thing" he had ever heard, and that he considered Plissner "insane." Almost immediately the recall of Richard as city councilman was started. Plissner himself even had the nerve to file the first petition of 47 names asking for Richard's removal.

Permit Bureau Speed-Up Aiding New Construction

Creation of the District's Central Permit Bureau has speeded up the District Department of Inspection's work to the extent that 66 percent of all plans and permits are now approved within 24 hours. Before it was set up the department was six months behind in approving new construction.

These statements were contained in transcripts of congressional hearings last month on the District budget.

So TERRIFIC it took 7 months to save up for this sale!

So HEAVY they tip the scale at 12 ounces each!

So BIG they measure almost 4 feet long!

IF PERFECT THEY'D BE 1.79

The sale you've been waiting 7 long months for! Your favorite high-fashion, high-color towels at a fraction of their first quality price! Cannon gives us all their seconds of "Empress" towels, fast as they accumulate. At last we have enough to advertise! Only perfectionists like Cannon would label them seconds. The flaws are so minute, so unimportant. Cannon's "Empress" towels have close underweave for greater strength. They're so long-looped they lap up water like a sponge. So heavy, each one tips the scales at a good 12 ounces. So rugged, they set your skin a-tingling. Jumbo 24x46 size, too. . . . 4 inches wider, 6 inches longer than average towels. Cherry red, aqua, pink, yellow, sky blue, green spray, white.
